

Change in Bang's Law Advocated by Oregon Dairymen

A change in Oregon's Bang's disease control law to permit the use of calfhood vaccination as well as the present test-and-slaughter method, will be advocated before the present Oregon legislature by the Oregon Dairymen's association as the result of action taken at the recent annual convention held in Grants Pass. The disease-control committee, headed by E. L. Peterson, Coquille, considered all angles of the Bang's disease problem, including the newest findings on calfhood vaccination, and then submitted a report agreed to unanimously by all concerned.

The proposed law changes would permit the use of the calfhood vaccination method under definite restrictions as outlined recently by Dr. John R. Mohler, chief of the federal bureau of animal industry. It was pointed out that calfhood vaccination will apparently be a valuable supplement to present highly successful control methods, but that it involves close attention to exacting requirements if it is to be successful, and under no circumstances may it be used safely by an untrained person.

Oregon has consistently led the nation in the fight against Bang's disease, partly as a result of the pioneer work done by the veterinary department at Oregon State college.

The dairymen's association also will sponsor a bill to raise money by a small assessment against butterfat sales, the resulting fund to be used in sales promotion work either in Oregon or in co-operation with national campaigns. (The assessment of one-half cent per pound would be made only in one month each year, and would be a direct assessment against the producers, hence would have no effect on prices paid by consumers.)

Oscar Hagg of Reedsville was re-elected president of the association; E. L. Peterson, Coquille, and Lee Holliday, Klamath Falls, vice-president, and Roger Morse, Oregon State college, secretary-treasurer. Directors chosen include W. A. Johnson, Grants Pass; Dick DeJong, Amity; Fritz Beltz, Tillamook, and James McCracken, Ashland. Next year's convention site will be selected later by the board of directors.
