NEW ARMY QUOTA.

A new quota of 60 regular army foreign service vacancies has been supplied the Oregon recruiting district, according to information received this week from Lieutenant Colonel B. H. Hensley, district recruiting officer. Vacancies are again available in all of the Pacific foreign service departments: the Hawaiian and Philippine Islands and the Panama Canal.

The colonel added that for those who have had a high school education or have had specialized training in a mechanical trade, the regular army is offering enlistments in the air corps. Those who enlist in the air corps and who show special qualifications may be sent to one of several army technical schools where the enlisted man may study airplane mechanics and a variety of other subjects concerning aerial defense.

Scientific Drunk

The question of when a motorist is drunk in the meaning of the law may soon be removed from the realm of controversial judgment to one of scientific certainty. A device, demonstrated recently at Lansing, Mich., is said to be able to do just that. It is a machine that tests the content of alcohol in the suspect's breath. This, scientists say, bears a constant relation to the amount of alcohol in the blood. Anything up to five-hundredths of 1 per cent would not justify a drunk-driving charge, but over that proportion, the charge would be laid, if other symptoms of intoxication are present.

Fernandez Slides to Score

Friolan Fernandez, of San Francisco Seals, slides to score as 13-game pre-season winning streak of Philadelphia Athletics is broken, 7-4, in game on Seals' home lot. Catcher Frank Hayes muffed throw from outfield, so Pitcher Johnny Babich unsuccessfully backstopped for him at home plate.

Irrigation Water Prospects Varied Throughout State

Irrigation water prospects in Oregon which appeared generally favorable two months ago had become highly variable by the time the final forecasts were made the first week in April, according to reports issued by R. A. Work, Medford, in charge of snow surveys and irrigation water forecasts for the Soil Conservation service and O.S.C. experiment station.

Little or no snow was added to the watersheds during February and March in most sections. While most soils on watersheds as well as in farming areas are still well soaked from heavy fall and early winter rains, irrigation water from stream flow and reservoir supplies will be critically short in some sections though fully ample in others.

The series of forecast meetings just completed revealed that shortages of greater or less extent will exist this year in the region from Deschutes county north to the Columbia and east to the Blue mountains. Full reservoirs and good stream flow characterize the territory from there east through Wallowa, Baker and Malheur counties and along the south-east and south central section with minor exceptions. Southern Oregon west of the Cascades will have some local water problems again this year.

Probably the most critical situation was reported from the Milton-Freewater district where failure of the Walla Walla river to reach its usual high stage left the surrounding ground storage replenished. Hundreds of irrigation wells are expected to be dry or extremely low this summer. Steps to conserve early moisture have been recommended.

The large Owyhee and Vale projects, on the other hand, are starting the season under exceptionally favorable conditions with enough water in storage for two years, soil and growth conditions excellent, and stream flow good in the region.

Late spring rains would help the situation in many sections where prospects now are none too bright, it was reported.
