

Farm Meeting at Roseburg July 25

Leaders in the farm and community life of Lane county, county agricultural and home demonstration agents, and farm security administration officials got together at Roseburg July 25th, and in an all-day meeting exchanged views and mapped plans for better assisting disadvantaged farm families to find new opportunities on the land.

Agricultural and civic leaders who attended the meeting are members of the county farm security administration council, which was established to assist the government agents in planning a coordinated attack on rural problems. Represented on the council are members of the farm tenant purchase, rural rehabilitation and farm debt adjustment committees and three members at large, leaders in their communities.

The meeting began at 10:00 a. m. with a discussion on the general subject "Disadvantaged Families in American Agriculture." Later this group centered its attention on the problems faced by rural people in this county. In the afternoon the part which members of the County Council are to play in facilitating the work of the Farm Security Administration, U. S. Department of Agriculture, was discussed.

Robert W. Schmidt, county supervisor for the Farm Security Administration, U. S. Department of Agriculture, said that during the past years a total of 175 rehabilitation loans had been made in this county. He stressed the fact that no loans had been made in cases where repayment would not be possible if the borrowing family followed the detailed "farm and home plan" worked out by the family with the assistance of technical experts of the Farm Security Administration. Practically all the families are repaying their loans at a satisfactory rate, he said.

In 40 cases the Farm Security Administration assisted farmers who were hopelessly burdened with debt to make adjustments with their creditors. Supervisor Schmidt explained that in such cases the FSA acted as a third party, calling the farmer and his creditors together to work out mutually satisfactory repayment plan.

Through the tenant purchase program which has operated in this county during the past year six tenants and laborers have been enabled to buy family-sized farms. Loans are made at three percent interest over a forty-year period for such purposes.

Those attending the meeting as members of the county farm security administration council were: Allen P. Wheeler, Marvin T. Waplek, Minnie B. Plank, Fred Petzold and C. N. Jensen.

Others attending were: Dale R. Winn, RR supervisor; Robert W. Schmidt, RR supervisor; Harriett L. Roberts, HM supervisor; Walter A. Klundt, district FDA specialist, and Harry Bower, district supervisor.

AULD DIES

H. C. Auld, 65, retired lumberman of Eugene, died at his home Saturday following a heart attack. Mr. Auld came to Eugene in 1909 and has since made his home there. After arriving in this section he helped found the Mohawk Lumber Co. He retired from business several years ago.

Howdy Folks: If there's a tie between the father and son usually the son is wearing it.

Another thing commonly conceded is that many a father is affected by a touch of the son.

While on the subject of fathers we heard of one who thought that adverse weather conditions had absolutely no effect on the crop of wild oats.

The price of our Crosley Refrigerator is low considering the extra value and service delivered. Come in and let's talk about it.

AAA Program for 1942 Is Simple and More Adaptable

Elimination of total soil depleting allotments and the establishment of a uniform soil conservation requirement for each farm are the principal basic changes in the 1942 AAA program as applied to Oregon, the state AAA office has announced.

The will be no commercial vegetable allotment, but special allotments will again be established on wheat and potatoes. However, payment for compliance with these special allotments will be conditioned by a requirement that 20 per cent of the crop land on the farm be devoted to soil conserving uses, such as perennial grasses and legumes, biennial legumes, protected summer fallow, approved green manure or cover crops, and forest trees planted on crop land since 1936.

The new provision puts soil conserving acreage requirements on a uniform basis for each farm. In the past, total soil depleting allotments have been established for each county, and then set up for each farm by the county committee.

"The changes are expected to simplify administration of the program and also place greater emphasis on conservation," commented N. C. Donaldson, state AAA executive officer. "They also make the program more flexible to meet national defense needs."

"The new program should result in an increase in soil conserving practices in the wheat areas. It will also give credit to the farmer who has already put his operation on a sound soil-conserving basis," Donaldson added.

A farm's soil building allowance will be calculated in much the same manner as last year. A flat 70 cents an acre will be allowed for each acre of crop land in excess of special allotment acreage for wheat and potatoes, $2 an acre for commercial orchard acreage, $1 an acre for commercial vegetables, and 50 cents for restoration land. Non-crop pasture and range allowances will be little changed from 1941.

Soil building practices, rates of payment and deductions are expected to be about the same as 1941. They are now being printed and will be announced as soon as available.

SMALL FRUIT PRODUCTION BIG INDUSTRY IN OREGON

The production of small fruits in Oregon is on the increase and forms an industry of real economic importance to this state, particularly in the Willamette valley according to facts listed in a new extension circular No. 371, entitled "Small Fruits, 1940." This circular is issued by the O. S. C. extension service in cooperation with the United States department of agriculture, and includes detailed production and income statistics for Oregon by counties.

The production of nine kinds of small fruits in Oregon in 1940 was estimated at 78,172,000 pounds, harvested from 23,300 acres. This compares with a four-year average from 1936 to 1940 of 63,181,600 pounds from 21,896 acres. Cash farm income from small fruits was estimated at $3,557,500 compared with the four-year average of $3,433,260.

A relatively large proportion of the commercial small fruit industry of the United States is in Oregon, the circular points out. Approximately 6 per cent of the national cash farm income from this source goes to Oregon producers. The production of large amounts of small fruits annually in Oregon provides raw materials for much canning and cold packing business, from which additional employment and income are derived.
