THINGS TO WATCH FOR

Cooling idea for ladies' watches is to surround them in a small cube of transparent plastic, so that they look as though they were frozen in the middle of an ice cube. . . . If you're joining the Navy, watch for tarpaulins made of woven glass—said to be lighter in weight than canvas, and unaffected by sea water or salt air. . . . Carolina Aniline and Extract company has a new synthetic chemical to be mixed with any paint to prevent mildew on painted surfaces. . . . Jitterbugs needn't worry about any war shortage of imported bamboo reed for saxophones and clarinets, for there's a new line of plastic reeds out, in five degrees of stiffness. . . . Possible bargains in regulation "girls' bicycles" for the present styles call so insistently for wearing slacks or shorts that bike dealers are worried that the models built to accommodate skirts may become a drug on the market. . . . Electric lights on automobile dashboards to flash when the generator is not charging, or when oil pressure sinks to the danger point. . . . Sugar is the latest food to be impregnated with vitamins. . . . An orange-nut bread is latest to join the canned bread ranks.

Vegetables For Flavor

Doctors and nutritionists agree that an adequate day's diet includes two or more servings of vegetables besides potatoes—one raw vegetable, one leafy, green or yellow vegetable.

There has been considerable written about the importance of preserving the mineral and vitamin content of vegetables when cooked. While this point is important it can be over-emphasized, for if flavor has to be sacrificed in order to retain the minerals we really have not gained much, as the vegetables will not appeal and thus will not be eaten. Our chief aim should be to develop both flavor and appetite appeal. In a varied diet, which includes the necessary amounts of the protective foods—milk, fruits, vegetables and eggs—there is usually an ample supply of minerals and vitamins for proper nutrition.

cooked cabbage, which for years was the friend of all digestion 'aids' on the market, was really not to blame for this state of affairs. By overdoing the cooking, the homemaker was not only destroying the delicate flavor and color but also developing indigestibility. Shredded young cabbage is at its best when boiled from seven to fifteen minutes. When cooked in milk instead of water there is the added food value—and the coloring is heightened.

Corn can be found in the markets now and for those who like corn on the cob, sweet and succulent, the following method will delight their epicurean taste. Select fresh young corn; remove outer husks and silk; leave a layer of inner husks, and drop into boiling water. Boil rapidly for three minutes. Remove husks and serve with butter—being sure there is plenty of butter. And if there is any left over—scoop out tomatoes, fill them with buttered corn and put them in a pan with a little water; bake to heat.

For the person who resists these good-for-you foods—asparagus, broccoli, string beans are leafy without being too obvious about it.
