ROSICRUCIANS CREATE LIFE BY ANCIENT ALCHEMICAL PROCESS.

While blitzkrieg tactics blast into infinitesimal bits thousands of human lives on the battlefields of Europe, in a California laboratory successful attempts have been made by other men to create particles of living matter.

Working with an alchemical formula over four centuries old, Rosicrucian chemists in San Jose, California, have succeeded in transmuting inorganic salts into minute organisms.

Dr. Simkins of 1038 W. Main, who has just returned from the International Rosicrucian Amore Convention held the latter part of July, states the announcement of the experiment was made to an assembly of six hundred persons attending the international convocation. Professor Atherton M. Whaley, Ph.D. in chemistry, and Orval Graves, Rosicrucian Research Librarian, using compounds of silver nitrate, lead nitrate, and iron chloride, in accordance with a translation from a formula from the works of Paracelsus, renowned medieval physician and alchemist, were able to transmute the inorganic crystals into organic salts known as ether compounds. These salts contain the properties and characteristics of simple life and were immediately recognizable to the biologists who subjected the results to microscopic analysis. He states that Mr. Graves related that the greatest problem confronting the experimenters was the translation of the allegorical terminology of the ancient alchemical writings and symbols used to conceal truth in the Middle Ages, into an understandable formula.

Following the process established by the late F. J. Jolivet Castellet, president of the Rose-Croix Societe Alchemique de France, using silver as a catalytic agent uniting antimony and arsenic, and subjecting them to extreme high temperatures, the Rosicrucian researchers in the laboratories of the philosophic Order were able to produce minute specks of gold. The specimens were able to withstand the assayer's test, it is related. Dr. Simkins admits, however, that the experiment has no commercial value, but is important in disproving the old assumption that the alchemists dealt solely in fantasies. The alchemical experiments have been conducted as part of the researches of the Rose-Croix University in San Jose.
