FUTURE FARMERS IN NEW CONTEST

Outstanding addition in the Future Farmers of America participation in the Oregon state fair September 1-7 will be the "better farming contest" sponsored by the Kiwanis clubs of Oregon. Each chapter in the state will have one competitor, who will show his project in the Future Farmer building on the grounds.

These young farmers, all high school boys, will fill an exhibit building on the grounds with their farm work; and will show also cattle, sheep and swine in the FFA sections in the big livestock barn. They have a section in the poultry show too.

The FFA livestock judging contest, one of the highlights of their competition, is scheduled for Friday morning, September 5.

Oregon Drivers Wasted $22.23 During 1940

Failure to maintain their automobiles in proper adjustment cost Oregon motorists an average of $22.23 per vehicle last year or more than $8,900,000 total, according to Dr. E. B. McDaniel, president of the Oregon State Motor association. Dr. McDaniel based his estimates on the findings of exhaustive road tests just completed by the American Automobile association's contest, board in cooperation with the United States Bureau of Standards.

The tests revealed, Dr. McDaniel said, that of all motor fuels used, 14.7 per cent represents sheer waste from this single cause—lack of proper adjustment. The money loss for the nation as a whole amounts to well over six hundred million dollars per year. "The tests, conducted under the strictest possible scientific and technical conditions, took into consideration only the wastage due to maladjustment of the average vehicle from the standpoint of stretching gasoline mileage," Dr. McDaniel declared, "and the economies effected by making proper adjustments to the vehicles were secured without adversely affecting performance. In fact, in several cases, performance was improved."

"While the officials making the tests agree that the average car is about four years old, the vehicles put through the tests represented an average age of considerably below this figure. A greater possible saving might have been shown had the cars been more nearly 'average'." "Actual road tests were run by officials from the Bureau of Standards, who put the cars through their paces first just as they came off the streets, where they had been in every-day use. After carefully recording fuel consumption on this first test, the experts took the cars into a shop, made the necessary adjustments, and then put them over the same precise measured course.

"Adjustments made included cleaning and adjusting carburetor and fuel pump, checking and adjusting ignition system and timing, and the checking and adjusting of wheel alignment, brake clearances, and tire pressure. "If this substantial saving can be made through attention to adjustments alone, it is plain that the savings which may be added through proper driving practices will easily bring total savings per car up to the 20 per cent which petroleum authorities say it is necessary to save to prevent shortages and for which rationing has already started on the east coast," Mr. McDaniel said.
