Sergeant York Coming to Arcade Theater January 25, 26, 27, and 28

The outstanding motion picture of the year, "Sergeant York," is coming to the Arcade Theater for a four-day engagement January 25 through the 28th.

Here's a preview with a little background in the life of Alvin York which may prove interesting:

Alvin C. York is a simple Tennessee farmer, whose incredible, single-handed capture of 132 German prisoners in 1918 blazed in headlines across the world. "What you did," said Marshal Foch, as he bestowed on him the Medaille Militaire, "is the greatest deed accomplished by any Allied soldier."

When Sergeant York (promoted for his heroism) came back home, he was America's idol. Honors, parades, banquets engulfed him; movie, theater and business contracts totalling $250,000 were tossed in his lap, but York refused all offers, including that of Jesse Lasky to star him in his own film biography. "I wouldn't trade on the American uniform," he said.

So Sergeant York went back to his native valley—the Valley of the Three Forks of the Wolf—to farm his land once more. Again Lasky approached him, unsuccessfully, in the late '20s. But when the present war started the U. S. on a national defense program, the producer was able to convince York the film would be a patriotic service. So, after 23 years of waiting, Jesse Lasky now presents, with Warner Bros., the true story of Sergeant York. This new movie about war will open at the Arcade on Sunday, January 25th, for a four-day run.

The screen play is based on York's diary, as edited by a collaborator, on the Congressional Record, and on anecdotes collected in his native village from the hero's neighbors. (Lasky made four trips there, with scenarists and stenographer.) There are 26 real-life characters portrayed in the film, including York's overseas buddies and the noted men he met after his return. Most of them are still living; and the studio sent a man on a 10,000-mile journey to get the necessary signed releases.

Sergeant York okayed the carefully authenticated script. He paid a three-week visit to Hollywood, looked over the sets, and made the cordial acquaintance of Gary Cooper. And with the money he received, the Alvin York Foundation has built a community gymnasium for Alvin York's friends and neighbors.
