Oven Meals

Summer's here, and I'm bringing up oven meals? Yes, but there's a method to my madness. Nutrition experts agree that hot, hearty meals are a "must" for our families the year around and I'd like to see us all get that healthy habit now. Oven meals are nutritious, yet they keep us from dancing constant attendance in the kitchen.

No special equipment or recipes are needed with these few general rules about preparing oven meals: Try to choose foods which require the same temperature and approximately the same length of time. Estimate the length of time to cook the meal by the weight of the meat. If meat requires longer cooking than other foods, place it in the oven first, then add vegetables and dessert at proper time. Roast meat in an uncovered pan, and don't add any water.

Cook vegetables in covered pans. (If they take about 30 minutes on the surface, allow 1 hour in the oven.) It's best to skip quick-cooking vegetables, such as peas, broccoli, asparagus and cabbage, in oven-cooked meals.

Foods cooked with a large amount of syrup on the bottom of the pan belong on the upper rack. Meat usually goes on the bottom, pastries and desserts on top. Vegetables may be in the center or on the bottom with the meat.
