KEEPING UP THE CIVIC ASSETS

Not all local citizens play golf, but without exception the public-spirited citizen wants to see the civic assets of the community function as nearly normal as possible. History of the Cottage Grove Golf club has been one of trials and tribulations as have been golf clubs in municipalities the size of Cottage Grove. Most important thing through the ups and downs the club has been kept going, supplying a place for those who liked the sport an opportunity to play. The war has thinned the ranks of the golfers making it more difficult to keep the club going in the usual way.

It was for the purpose of renewing interest in golf that the Lions-Chamber of Commerce match was played Friday. This is a busy time but all should take time off to play a little.

CONFUSION ON THE JAP ISSUE

There is considerable confusion in the minds of the general public as to the loyalty and treatment of the Japanese moved from the west coast and located in the western camps. One day we read where a large percentage of the Japanese interned are loyal Americans and the next day we read where there has been an uprising regarding some Americanism issue. Some sources say ninety percent of the Japs in camp are loyal Americans, another report says the loyalty is less than fifty percent.

Reports are also current that large quantities of food has been hoarded in these camps, but if true it seems odd that the government would let such a policy continue while the rest of us are being rationed.

There is also the question of resettling the Japs now in our country once the war is over. The solution to this question has never been approached so far as we know and may develop into one of the post war headaches.

DELINQUENCY

Speaking of juvenile delinquency, a judge recently expressed a wish that he might be permitted to try the parents rather than the wayward juveniles in handling the juvenile problems. All of which brings us to the source of trouble. Juvenile problems are being helped by providing community centers and entertainment, but to effect anything like a cure, we are afraid the judge is right in his conclusion.

Problems of the youth more common now than in former years rests heavily with the parents a number of whom refuse to take the matter of child rearing seriously. In many cases it interferes too much with the personal pleasures of the parents involved. Of course there are exceptions where both parents are attempting to work, leaving the children without proper supervision. Except in cases of this sort it is difficult for the layman to see why youth delinquency should grow because if there ever was a time when everybody is working, it is now.

NO MAGIC IN BUREAUCRACY

New frontiers of accomplishment that promise not only better living for us, but for the peoples of the world, are seen for the future by Robert P. Barbour, president of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, if opportunity and rewards are not denied and "if government keeps its hands out of business and industrial enterprise that can be handled capably by private citizens."

Speaking at the Board's 77th annual meeting, Mr. Barbour called attention to warnings by Congressional leaders of the dangerous expansion of government by bureaucratic edict and directive, and said: "Only an informed and vocal public can kill this unhealthy growth, which, in so many countries of the world, has made the individual little more than a cipher. Let no one believe any government has magic enough to give something for nothing."

Mr. Barbour cited a world trend to minimize the importance of the individual and to magnify the importance of the state, with resulting loss of personal liberty and initiative. "Even in this country there has been growth of a philosophy that would have us believe we have outgrown the American way of life," that government bureaus and super-agencies can plan for and direct the individual better than he can for himself; a philosophy which tells young people that the opportunities that their forefathers enjoyed have gone and that the government must plan and do for them."

It is a healthy sign when business and political leaders are alert to recognize a menace to freedom on the home front as well as the battle front.

Washington Letter

(By Harris Ellsworth, Member of Congress from Oregon)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 12. Concrete suggestions for congressional action on the food problem have not yet reached the floor of either the House or the Senate. But behind the scenes, members of congress and at least two committees of the house are very busy on this subject.

The republican congressional food study committee, which has been working two months gathering facts on the food situation, discovered early in its activities that the very first thing to do is to unify the control of food from growing to eating, including rationing and price fixing. We found that ten agencies are now dabbling in the business of handling, buying or controlling food. Most of the difficulties in producing, distributing and retailing food, including the awful mixed-up effort of OPA are actually traceable to the fact that too many other organizations are involved.

Accordingly, a bill written by Chris Herter of Massachusetts and thrashed over and revised and finally approved by the 42-member food study committee was introduced in the House by Representative Thomas A. Jenkins of Ohio, chairman of the study committee. This bill provides for the centralized control of food under the Department of Agriculture, with a food administrator clothed with all necessary powers.

Then politics reared its ugly head. The Jenkins bill is apparently recognized by the administration party as being a good bill. It has had wide publicity, but has had no criticism raised against it. On the contrary, Fulmer, chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, has introduced a bill which is very similar to the Jenkins bill but lacking a few of its important points.

Meanwhile, rumors of changes and consolidations by executive order to forestall congressional action are flying around. In fact, the creation of the Office of War-time Mobilization under James F. Byrnes was sort of a gesture in the direction of saving the necessity of the passage of the Jenkins bill.

It does not really matter in the long run whether the democrats are able to claim the credit for the legislation or whether the republican bill is passed. It is a certainty that something must be done and done soon.

The President of Paraguay addressed the house this week. It seems to be the custom to have the head of another nation appear before the Congress when he visits Washington. It is a fine friendly gesture. In all candor, I must say that other than for the slightly colorful nature of the ceremony, such an event is not overly interesting, because the visitor addresses the House in his own language. Although we hear his voice, we cannot understand what he is saying. Before the visiting dignitary is ushered in, mimeographed copies of his address (in English, of course) are passed around to the members of Congress. It is thus possible to follow the address, and applause is generally given at the proper places.

When a distinguished visitor comes to address the House, the Speaker names an escort of members—usually the two party floor leaders and two others. The guest is met at the center door of the House floor and is duly escorted down the center aisle. He ascends to the speaker's rostrum and stands beside the speaker, who introduces him. The escorts are seated on the rostrum level just below the Speaker—but above the house floor. (Churchill spoke from this second level, I suppose because it was easier to assemble the great battery of radio mikes there). After the guest of honor and the escort party which, by the way, also includes the chairman of the house foreign affairs committee and the house sergeant-at-arms, members of the diplomatic corps of the country represented by the visitor file in and take front seats on the house floor.

When a distinguished visitor is to address us, a recess of the House is declared by the Speaker immediately after he names the escorts—so the House is not actually in formal session.

The Agriculture Department appropriation bill is now the top item of interest here. This bill carries the forest protection appropriations. The house failed to include enough fire protection money in the bill as sent to the Senate. The Senate increased the amounts. As the bill now comes back to the House for final approval, the forest fire protection item is almost exactly the same amount as that used for this purpose during the present fiscal year. We will endeavor to keep this sum in the bill and finish its passage next week.

"THE SUPREME IRONY"

To the Editor: On a day the Nation—and incidentally the United Nations—takes for the display of the Flag of This Country—a flag honored by all people—YES—even by our enemies—the Supreme Court of this same United States—renders a decision, that abrogates its former rendering of decisions about the saluting of this same Flag, our sons are dying for! The founding fathers of this country did write into the Constitution they framed, that we should have a freedom of religion—BUT they meant religion established and in general use, and did NOT include some fantastic cult to be, that would flout defiance of the very country it used for its own protection—and which would try to qualify for martyrdom if it had to obey certain customary usages on the country, such as a rendered honor to its flag. With religious right I have no quarrel, BUT—every other religious belief in this country, says nothing about any insult to a Deity—God—if you wish, and every other sect does render honor to the flag, and ALL flags as symbols of a country's unity, and makes no bones about the matter. I want to "KNOW" WHO is so "POWERFUL" in this particular sect—that it can have a rendition in its favor of the opinion of the Supreme Bench of these United States. To me the hair is the hair of Jehovahism—but the hand is the hand of the Nazi. Edw. J. Gotch, Adj. Calvin Funk Post 32!

Hail the WAACS

This is a good clean allegedly true story told by E. W. Tohlen, so you don't have to prepare to blush. The incident happened in a California camp.

A supply officer in charge of an army warehouse telephoned his commanding officer that the wax has arrived (referring to an overdue shipment of Johnson's wax). The officer understood that the WAACS were coming so he ordered the company of soldiers to dress, slick their hair up and go to the station to meet the WAACS. They went and returned disappointed. The officer started an investigation of the source of the story and found it, but could not do anything to the supply officer, since the latter told the truth to the best of his ability.

NEW BOOKS AT LIBRARY

Eighty new books have been received recently at the public library, sixty-five of which are fiction and non-fiction for adults and fifteen for children, in a report from Mrs. Dan Hamant, librarian.

A book of interest to children especially at this time of year is "How to Know the Butterflies" by Comstock; "Chimney Corner Stories" by Hutchinson; "The Picture Book of Travel" by Hader, and "Jungle Babies" by Kaigh-Eustace will attract and hold the attention of the children. A two-volume set of books on "The Aluminum Industry" by Edwards should be interesting and valuable books especially to the people of this community since the discovery of alumina clay in our section.

For the lover of sports there are books on tennis, sailing and photography and other sports and hobbies. For the tennis player is "Budge on Tennis" by Donald Budge who received the James E. Sullivan memorial trophy as the outstanding athlete of the U. S. in 1937. The photography fan will find "Photography of Colored Objects," "How to Make Good Movies" and "How to Make Good Pictures" a great help and will enjoy reading these books.

"Sailing Made Easy in Pictures" by Rufus G. Smith takes the new yachtsman step by step rising from the beginning assuming that he has had no sailing experience. Terms and expressions are defined and identified pictorially and preparations for the first sail are made. Step by step the various points of sailing are described and the care of the boat and its sails and the tying of useful knots explained.

These are just a few of the non-fiction books received recently. There are many more both non-fiction and fiction books of interest.

I KEEP MY HEALTH THROUGH POISE

In the following interesting article Merle Oberon tells of the importance of poise:

"Have you ever wondered what it is that makes one particular woman stand out from a crowd of others? Her clothes don't come from Paris, her figure is no replica of Venus, and her face is not her particular fortune; yet this woman 'carries' her beauty in the poise of her neck, the tilt of her nose, the set of her shoulders, and the rhythm of her movements. In short, she makes her clothes, not they her."

"An entrance can be such a dramatic and lovely thing, as you must of have seen for yourself in a film or play. You can enjoy that same exciting and breath-taking moment yourself when all heads are turned in your direction, not because of your face or figure, your hair or your gown, but because all four are carried with that exquisite grace and self-assurance, that perfection of carriage and bearing which are summed up in the one word—poise."

DR. H. A. HAGEN

DAD

He may wear last year's hat—his vest may hang a little loose—his trousers may bag a bit at the knees—but don't you call him "old man" . . . He's your Father. For years he's been rustling around to get things together. He thinks you're the greatest boy on earth—but none—even though you do plaster your hair back, wear your shirt outside your pants—leave your collar open—go without a tie and are usually "flat broke."

He is the man who won the love of the grandest lady on earth—your Mother. And he's SOME MAN—not your "old man" . . . If you can win as good a wife as he did, you'll have to go some, boy!
