Abbott-Costello Team Up in "It Ain't Hay," Arcade

Only once in a decade do a "low" comedian and his "straight man" flash to the top in Hollywood.

But when those comedians come along, it is no mere "flash." In the case of Bud Abbott and Lou Costello, the "low" comedian and his "straight man" flashed straight to the top and stayed there.

Abbott and Costello came to the Arcade Theatre in Damon Runyon's "It Ain't Hay" on June 27 as the championship box-office personalities of all time.

The Universal comedians were recently crowned kings of popularity in an official poll conducted annually among theatre men by Hollywood trade publications. "Low" comedian is a trade term which means a comedian who depends more on pantomime and laughlines underlined with pathos than on sophisticated dialogue. Such a comedian is Costello, the ridiculously funny fat man who walks into the hearts of his audiences by being the underdog and butt of all jokes.

Has Envy Reputation

Abbott is recognized as the greatest of all "straight men," the men who "feed" lines to the comedians and contribute toward building the comic up to pantomimic situations.

This true genius in creating laughter is reserved for the few, and Hollywood's annals show that such a team comes along, on the average, only once in a decade.

Abbott and Costello have a colorful race track background for their hilarious fun-making in "It Ain't Hay." Supporting players in the musical comedy feature include Grace McDonald, Cecil Kellaway, Eugene Pallette, Patsy O'Connor, Richard Lane and Leighton Noble and his orchestra.

Alex Gottlieb was the producer and Erle C. Kenton the director.

WAR DEPT. FROWNS ON "ROUND ROBINS"

Writing soldiers "round robins," or news letters, and inviting composite replies by the group is inadvisable, the War Department has warned. Replies tend to become anthologies of military information, and a custom that arose from innocent motives becomes a security hazard.
