Potato Found, in Andes Discovery of the white potato at the Equator marked no exception to its demand for cool climate. It was found high in the Andes mountains where wheat and Indian corn could not stand the cold. It was taken to Europe by the Spaniards about 1580.

Potato Industry Grows Starch factories and dehydrating plants that have sprung up in northern Maine since Pearl Harbor prove that America's uses for the potato are increasing. Maine's Aroostook county has the loam and climate to win top rank among the nation's potato regions. It normally grows one-ninth of the nation's crop. Its farms average 270 bushels per acre against a national average of 130 bushels. Increased acreage needs only the co-operation of the weather to make a record crop in 1943.
