WHERE WAR REALLY HURTS CIVILIAN LIFE
Up to now we have had to put up with a few inconveniences, such as food and gas rationing, do without radio tubes in a few instances, perhaps do without a new washing machine or new ice box, but so far nobody has suffered or gone hungry. The civilian population has been the hardest hit in the taking away of both men and women in our school systems, who are sorely needed by the school children. Lack of teachers has closed a number of rural schools in remote districts and the prospects are that more will be closed another year. The large systems face the prospect of losing practically all of the men teachers of draft age before another year closes. These men are particularly valuable because of their leadership among the youth and boys of teen age, who need guidance in the few critical years ahead. If the leadership is not provided we may have a tough problem to solve on the home front even though we win the war, which we will.

We will at least learn to evaluate teachers who are capable of giving the school patrons something besides book training for their children and perhaps in years to come be more generous in the matter of salaries which will assure higher standards in our educational system. Good teachers are like other good things of life, we never sorely miss them until we have to do without their services.

THAT SENATE RACE

Republicans will find plenty of interest in the Holman-Morse contest for the U. S. Senate, which may develop into a horse race between the winner and Edgar W. Smith, on the democratic ballot in the general election. Smith is generally regarded as one of the strongest democrats to seek office in the coming general election. This contest has already received a good deal of editorial comment as shown by the following.

MORSE NO PUSSYFOOTER

Wayne Morse was the Lincoln Day orator at a republican rally in Klamath Falls in 1940. What he then said, when he was not a candidate for office, is likely to be evaluated by skeptics as more significant than anything he may say as a candidate. "I assert that the economic program of the New Deal involves basically a substitution of government industry for private industry," are words uttered four years ago, words difficult to reconcile with the present characterization of Morse as a "New Dealer."

Morse made his opinion clear that the New Deal policies were stifling private enterprise to the extent that investors as a class were afraid to risk their money as adventure capital. Their timidity was so widespread, general and typical that it amounted to panic.

"The New Deal," he said in this 1940 speech, "by its program of confiscating savings through taxes and of stifling private enterprise, has in a real sense created a general financial panic. We cannot confiscate the private wealth of our country and preserve at the same time the economic opportunity of our people through individual initiative to create wealth under our profit-motive economy."—Oregon Voter.

HOLMAN-MORSE CONTEST NOISY ONE

Raucous Rufus—Between Sprague and Cordon the contest would be waged with amity and decorum. Not so with the other contest!—between the Right Honorable Rufus Holman and the able and intelligent Dean Morse. For barring a straight-jacket and solitary confinement, Raucous Rufus can't keep still, and Dean Morse is no inarticulate neophyte in the art of oratorical self-defense or rough-and-tumble polemics. If the two commit rhetorical mayhem, they may allow Edgar Smith to walk in between the battered hulks and eop the coveted plum.—Medford Mail-Tribune.

NOW A GOOD DEMOCRAT APPEARS

With the entrance of Edgar W. Smith into the democratic U. S. senatorial primary each major party is now equipped with a candidate who is competent to represent this state in the halls of congress, and the voters of Oregon can now rest assured that, whichever way the fall election goes, they are on the safe side even if no other aspirant should meanwhile be produced by either party.

Edgar Smith is a native of Oregon and is a true Oregonian if there ever was one, for he has never lived elsewhere. He is one of those rare persons who was born with a silver spoon in his mouth, so to speak, and learned to use it instead of chewing it up. His father was one of the most successful farmers of eastern Oregon and the son attained no less success in the same manner, and along other lines as well.

This candidate, as behooves men who are economically able and mentally endowed, has seen fit to repay by personal service his country for the privilege which he and all Americans enjoy by reason of their citizenship. He has devoted much time in recent years to civic affairs and is now a member of the Oregon state board of higher education, to which his counsels have been of great value. He himself served in the U. S. armed forces during World War No. 1 and has two sons, one an infantry officer and the other a bomber pilot, in the army now.

Mr. Smith was chairman of the Oregon milk control board until he was named on the state board of higher education. He was treasurer of the democratic state central committee in 1928 and is a member of the American Legion and the Grange. With this background of experience and with his inherent qualities, Mr. Smith is ideally suited to public office and the democrats will find it difficult to produce a better candidate for the senatorship.

TOWNS TO REMEMBER

"Except to its inhabitants and friends, many a town is to the rest of the world merely an unknown name on the map. Motorists who remember pre-war travel have forgotten places they once slowed down—a little—to pass heedlessly through. "Not every town can boast of famous sons, or of historic taverns or of extraordinary natural curiosities. Yet any town can distinguish itself by the simple device of widespread planting of some single flower or shrub. Put an althea (maybe you know it as Rose of Sharon) on every lawn in a town and the place will grow steadily in favorable fame. Petunias or roses or hollyhocks, or whatever grows well will do as well.

"The effect on passing strangers is worthwhile. Of deeper value is the stimulated pride of those who call the town home. A town, like an individual, needs something to feed its pride."

WAYNE MONROE TO ARMY
Wayne Monroe, still a young man but a veteran printer will report for induction into the army at Fort Lewis on March 29th. Next to A. W. Snofstall, Wayne was the oldest employee of the Sentinel having spent the past fifteen years in the service of this newspaper. He knew his way around a print shop and how to operate all modern machinery as well as any other printing chore. Losing him was like losing a right hand, but a good many industries are suffering alike because of the heavy call of the army. Fact is there won't be any young men around here after another thirty days who can pass the army exam.

Five dollars was taken in on the "galloping club box." The box will be sent around again and the proceeds will be used to buy outing flannel for the Red Cross wheel chair robes.
