

Ginger Rogers Stars In "Tender Comrade"

How the women on America's home front are facing their intimate war problems is the basis of Ginger Rogers' latest dramatic starring vehicle, "Tender Comrade," a sincere and sympathetic story of four service wives working in an airplane plant while their husbands are in the Armed service which comes to the Arcade Theatre June 11th.

Ginger is Jo Jones who when her husky young husband, Chris, is called into the army, insists upon taking a hand in winning the war herself by taking the job of driving an electric pick-up dolly in a big plane factory. Three of the other war wives with whom Jo eats lunch discuss their troubles in getting a place to live. The foursome winds up by pooling resources, renting a large, old-fashioned house and engaging a housekeeper.

The experiences of the quartette in adjusting themselves to community living and in settling their personal troubles form an interesting background to the love story of Jo and Chris. The happy details of the past, the anxiety of the present result in an unusual screen vehicle, and one that ideally presents the popular star in her best role to date.

Robert Ryan, brilliant young newcomer, has the romantic lead opposite Ginger, and Ruth Hussey, Patricia Collinge, Kim Hunter, and Mady Christians have the principal supporting roles in the David Hempstead production for RKO Radio. Edward Dmytryk directed from the screenplay by Dalton Trumbo.

HAPPINESS FROM YOUR MEALS

By Dr. H. A. Hagen
Foods can contribute greatly to your happiness in these ways and for these reasons:

We are fully happy only when we have fully satisfied our needs for life and health. Food is our basic need. Only when we eat enough foods to live and the right foods to live well, can we enjoy the normalcy and health of mind and body that make for real happiness.

Eating is a pleasure that we can all enjoy three times a day. If we develop a lively interest in foods and know something about them, our pleasure is heightened. Our meals are frequent opportunities for daily happiness that soon add up to some proportions if we learn to make the most of them.

When we eat meals that we know are good for us, we generate a feeling of harmony and satisfaction within us that stems from the sense of doing right and is the first component of happiness. On the other hand, when we eat meals that we know are not good for us, we develop a feeling of guilt that makes for unhappiness.

Well-chosen foods give us confidence, and help to dispel the fears of sickness, for we know that we are using a powerful weapon against the enemy, disease. Thus foods impart a feeling of security that is essential for happiness.

Foods can help us change our bad moods into good ones. After we have eaten, we feel relaxed, refreshed and better able to cope with the problems that face us.

Washington Letter

(By Harris Ellsworth)

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 3, 1944.—If and when Rear Admiral Husband E. Kimmel and Major General Walter C. Short are tried under court-martial proceedings on charges of dereliction of duty in connection with the attack on Pearl Harbor, it is rather more likely that some startling revelations will be made. The two officers who commanded our forces in Pearl Harbor at the time of the attack will surely present facts at such a trial to prove they were not at fault and were not unfaithful to their duty. In that event, some one else will probably be indicated by their evidence as having been at fault. In other words, someone erred in not ordering the Pearl Harbor forces on the alert. If Kimmel and Short made this error, they should be found guilty and punished accordingly. If they were simply following orders from higher up—those higher persons should at least be compelled to share the blame.

Court-martial proceedings must be instituted within a stated time. Last December, the Congress extended this limitation six months to June 7th this year. Now the matter is before us again. Both House and Senate Judiciary Committees have reported resolutions extending the time for one year. The question now is whether the resolution will be amended to compel a court-martial, or passed as reported by committee. Meanwhile the two accused officers have waived the time limitation.

In support of the contention that this trial must be delayed until the war is over, it is argued that facts brought out might hurt our war effort—might give aid and comfort to the enemy. On the other hand, key witnesses may die or be killed in action if the trial is too long delayed, thus making it impossible for the accused officers to clear their names.

Then also, whether we like it or not, there is the political angle of the problem. Anti-administration forces believe that evidence presented by Kimmel and Short will be damaging to fourth term aspirations. They might be right. On the other hand, if the New Dealers insist upon delaying the trial, they find themselves in the position of adding fuel to the flame of suspicion that is already burning brightly. It is political dynamite any way you look at it.

The extension of the price control Act of 1942 (OPA) is the next important as well as the next controversial piece of legislation to be taken up by the congress. Tuesday the Senate banking and currency committee reported the bill out (S.1764) with several amendments. The house committee completed consideration and reported its bill, H. R. 4941, late Friday.

There never has been any serious consideration of the idea of abolishing the OPA—price control. Nearly everyone recognizes the wartime need for such control. What the republicans (and a substantial number of democrats) have been endeavoring to do is refine and improve the act so as to eliminate some of the more flagrant administrative abuses of

This one word has been an anticipated hope since the tragic day of Dunkirk but now that hope has developed into a reality. Let's help the boys over there to make it a short and successful campaign by buying more and more war bonds.

The house committee amended the bill changing the expiration date to June 30, 1945 and among other amendments are the following: profits cannot be fixed where such action has no relation to price control; individual adjustments in rents may be made where, due to peculiar circumstances, they are substantially higher or lower than rents generally prevailing; subsidies in effect as of date of enactment may be continued, but no additional subsidies paid except on authorization by congress; authority to restrict use of trade and brand names or require grade labelling is denied; unusual costs in production and short crop yields are to be considered in adjustment of maximum prices on fresh fruits and vegetables; specifies protest procedure; Emergency Court of Appeals jurisdiction similar to senate bill; provides for a subject committee of both house and senate banking and currency committees to meet at all times to consider administration of the act with power to subpoena witnesses, compel production of books, papers and documents and take testimony anywhere in the United States.

The house and senate will begin consideration of the respective bills very shortly since the legislation must be disposed of prior to the congressional recess less than three weeks distant.

'Piece de Resistance'
In the matter of food, instead of the traditional North American well-stuffed turkey, the Colombian's Christmas Eve dinner features as its "piece de resistance" the "lechón," or suckling pig; the Venezuelan's, the "Hallaca," concoction of meat or chicken pie, covered with banana leaves.

Side shows and concessions. Lots of fun and thrills at the carnival all this week. Show grounds, ball park. 43-2tp-2i.
