

Hollywood Has Ali Kinds Moonlight

If you've never seen moonlight that you could scoop up with your two hands or kick out of your way, then you've obviously never been in Hollywood. Out here they have that kind of moonlight and lots of other kinds. For here in the film capital, technical miracles are as common as old shoes under rationing and you can order up anything in natural phenomena and get it quicker than you can sing out "abada-ba" and make a couple of mystic passes. Anyway, almost.

A very special type of moonlight was wanted by Director Stevenson for a garden scene in "Jane Eyre," which 20th Century-Fox filmed with Orson Welles and Joan Fontaine, and which opens June 8th, at the Arcade Theatre. Instead of taking the matter up with the weatherman, Stevenson wisely discussed the problem with his chief cinematographer, George Barnes.

"I think I can whip up just the thing—something soft and glowy and just a little bit wispy," agreed Barnes, who has an Academy statuette to testify to his abilities in photography.

"And George, make it quite mellow, with a suggestion of being aged," Director Stevenson added.

That may sound like a big order, but to Barnes it was just one in a maze of problems involved in the day's work. To him it was a clear case of filming a scene in the dramatic mood of "Jane Eyre."

OPA Puts Ceilings On All Used Cars

WASHINGTON—The OPA Saturday slapped price ceilings on all used passenger cars, whether sold by dealers or private owners, at levels which prevailed in January, 1944.

The order is effective July 10, the month's delay being allowed for the trade to make its adjustments.

OPA set forth specific dollars-and-cents prices for 23 makes and about 6,000 models manufactured from 1937 through 1942. Older cars may not be sold for more than the comparable 1937 model.

"In some sections of the country, used cars three years old bring today two or three times more than similar cars bought before the war," OPA Administrator Bowles said in announcing the action.

The ceilings were fixed at different levels for three broad geographic regions. Highest prices prevail in the far west, lowest prices in the region east of the Mississippi river, and ceilings about halfway between for the remaining states.
