Oregon Vets Have Choice of Source Of Training Aid

OREGON STATE COLLEGE—Oregon veterans of world war 2 have three sources of educational aid to help them continue or begin their school or college training after their discharge, according to an analysis of federal and state laws made by E. B. Lemon, dean of administration. No individual veteran, however, may use more than one of these plans.

Any veteran who has served in the active military or naval service for at least 90 days subsequent to September 16, 1940, and whose education or training was interrupted by entrance into the service is obligated for a year or more aid under federal law No. 346, more commonly known as the GI bill of rights, Dean Lemon reports. Furthermore, any veteran not over 25 years of age at the time he entered the service is automatically considered to have had his education interrupted. The rate is up to $500 per year plus an allowance for living expenses.

If a veteran has suffered a disability he is eligible under the veteran rehabilitation act known as public law No. 16. Those who can qualify under this act will probably find it to their advantage to do so, explains Dean Lemon, as it provides essentially the same individual advantages and opportunities as the GI bill of rights but the subsistence allowances are considerably larger.

The recently enacted Oregon veterans' educational aid bill is available to any veteran who was a resident of Oregon for one year prior to induction into the service and who served in the armed forces not less than 90 days. The law specifically states, however, that if a veteran accepts aid under any federal plan he is not eligible for additional aid under the Oregon law. Dean Lemon points out that the Oregon act may offer slight financial advantage to a veteran over 25 years of age or to anyone with a short service record, if more than two years of college training is contemplated.

The registrar's office at O. S. C. is prepared to give any veteran more detailed information on these laws. Already 72 world war 2 veterans are enrolled at Oregon State, 36 under the GI bill and 36 under the rehabilitation program.
