Coffee Pioneer

The small republic of Costa Rica was the first country of the middle continent to take up the cultivation of coffee. Costa Ricans were producing coffee as early as 1796 and by 1825 had put the product on the international market. Cultivated on the high mountain slopes where a dry climate and a porous, volcanic soil combine to favor its growth, the coffee of Costa Rica is recognized as possessing a superior flavor, is greatly sought after in the international market.
