To help bring Scouting back again to the boys of countries where the movement was banned, the week of January 21 to 26 had been set aside as "World Friendship Week" in the Oregon Trail Council, Boy Scouts of America.

A "World Friendship Fund" has been set up by the Boy Scouts of America, and every Cub and Scout, as well as adult leader, is being given the opportunity to participate in the program "to help reorganize Scouting in allied countries devastated by the war."

The fund is used to send camping equipment, Scout manuals, uniform cloth, and other supplies to the Scouts abroad. The Boy Scout movement, started in England in 1907 by the late Lord Robert Baden-Powell, has grown to more than three million members in over 73 different lands.

A statement from the World Friendship Week committee, headed in the Oregon Trail Council by Alton F. Baker, says that "although each of the 48 Boy Scout associations has its own national characteristics each is internationally minded. Before the outbreak of World War II, Scouts and leaders got together each four years at great World Jamborees. By camping together, swapping their peculiar camping techniques and enjoying each other's company around campfires they got to respect each other's achievements."
