Food Saving for Famine Aid to Be Sought in Oregon

Oregon citizens will be asked to eat less of some foods, prevent waste and endure a few shortages to make more wheat and food fats and oils available to save lives in famine ridden countries.

The voluntary support of every man, woman and child in the state will be sought in a comprehensive food conservation program being initiated by county USDA councils, E. Harvey Miller, state director of the USDA, Production and Marketing administration and chairman of the Oregon USDA council, has announced. Miller and county AAA committee chairmen have been named by Secretary of Agriculture Clinton P. Anderson as state and county emergency food program managers.

Voluntary food-for-famine-relief committees, made up of representatives of all groups who can help in the program, are proposed for each county in plans adopted by the Oregon USDA council and sent to each county emergency food program manager.

Food conservation goals will be set up for each county. Subcommittees representing consumers, and trade groups, such as restaurants and bakeries, will be formed to put into effect specific food conservation measures. As proposed by the national famine emergency committee, these measures will include such wheat-and-fat saving steps as substitution of potatoes for bread, serving fewer fried foods, open-face pies, and one slice of bread with restaurant meals.

"The world food situation is exceedingly serious. Millions of our fellow human beings in other lands face the terrible disaster of famine. Every ounce of food we can spare from our abundance will save the lives of starving people," Miller commented.

A sub-committee of the state USDA council in active charge of organization of the statewide effort consists of C. R. Tulley, assistant director of the PMA field services branch, Portland, chairman; Ralph Morgan, state supervisor vocational agriculture, Salem; W. L. Teutsch, assistant director O.S.C. Extension service, Corvallis, and John Denny, fieldman PMA, Corvallis.
