Deadly Botulism Made Harmless If Foods Are Boiled

Botulism poisoning, probably the most dreaded type of food poisoning and which kills from one to three persons a year in Oregon, can be easily and positively eliminated simply by making sure that canned food in which it occurs is boiled 10 minutes before tasting as soon as the can or jar is opened.

This is the warning given by G. V. Copson, head of the bacteriology department at Oregon State college, as this year's canning season starts. While botulism has been reported at least once in almost every food, about 90 per cent of all cases have resulted from canned string beans and asparagus used cold as in a salad, and in canned corn that was warmed but not boiled, he added.

"The real danger of botulism is that it strikes so seldom that people become careless in preparation of canned food," Copson explained. "Because the deadly bacteria which cause botulism are so abundant in Oregon soil, constant care is needed. Nationally known commercially canned products have never been reported as causing botulism."

It is not safe to depend on odor or off flavor to reveal botulism contamination, the bacteriologist warns. Eating just one string bean that appeared normal caused the death of a woman who sampled a can before cooking the beans for the family, which ate them without injury after they were boiled. Half an olive has also proved fatal.

Following correct, conscientious canning methods is the first step in eliminating death from botulism, and the next is making sure that home canned susceptible foods are boiled 10 minutes as soon as opened and before they are even tasted, he concluded. If leftovers are put away for a few days, it is safest to boil them again.
