Our Company Is No Exception!

We are all experiencing in one way or another, the difficulties of any type of construction and of operation, because of shortages of many items of materials, supplies and equipment.

Many materials and items of equipment such as protection devices, wire and transformers—needed before electric service can be supplied—are practically unobtainable. Whatever trickle of these materials we receive are promptly dispatched to waiting job sites for installation.

The number of new customers that we can connect to our lines will be very few until present shortages are relieved. Let's hope it will end soon.

In view of the huge backlog of unfilled service applications now in our files, we suggest that no one plan for additional electric service for any purpose at any location before contacting the Company's office to determine if materials and facilities are available.

Naturally we are anxious to extend electric service to all applicants at the earliest possible moment and regret the necessity of this announcement forced upon us by circumstances totally beyond our control. We are sorry that you must wait for the electric service we are eager to provide. It is a tough situation—this business of having to say "Sorry."
