Many Businesses Violate Wage Act

Seattle — Thousands of new business enterprises in Washington, Oregon and Alaska are estimated to be in violation of wage stabilization regulations through failure to apply for approval of their wage schedules, John B. McCourt, Chairman of the 12th Regional Wage Stabilization Board, said today.

McCourt said all operators of such new businesses, employing more than eight workers, should apply immediately to the regional board for approval of their wage schedules or they will be subject to severe penalties in the form of income tax disallowances.

"The order requiring prior approval of wage schedules for new businesses exempts employers of eight or fewer workers but if the employment rises above eight, application for approval of the entire wage schedule must be filed within 30 days," McCourt pointed out.

Copies of the wage regulations governing new businesses and new job rates may be secured from the Regional Wage Stabilization Board offices in Seattle or from the nearest Wage and Hour Division office of the U. S. Department of Labor.

National Service Life Insurance Is Now Liberalized

New amendments liberalizing the national service life insurance add numerous advantages for veterans holding G. I. insurance policies, but the Veterans Administration is urging that inquiries be delayed for a short time until new forms and full information can be obtained and distributed, Frank Sias, VA representative at Portland said today.

"As soon as the new material is received, we will issue notices inviting veterans' inquiries, but at present these would only increase the backlog of mail in the VA's insurance service," Sias advised.

About 60,000 policies in Oregon, part of the 6,000,000 now in force in the nation, are eligible for the liberalized, peace-time benefits. Ten million others that were permitted to lapse throughout the U. S. are still entitled to reinstatement.

The new amendments, Sias pointed out, offer endowment types of policies not included in the original NSLI law, permit naming of beneficiaries outside the restricted classes allowed by the original bill, offer lump sum payments and total disability benefits which were not previously included.

Veterans now holding term insurance policies are advised to give mature thought to their insurance programs, since ample time remains for changes. Policies issued before this year may be continued without change for eight years from date of issue and policies created this year are good for five years without converting.
