Start Plans for Fertile Gardens

Success in gardening is, first of all, dependent upon a fertile soil. Soils depleted of organic matter and essential elements of soil fertility are poor garden soils, and poor crops can be expected from such soils. Lack of soil fertility has been especially evident in city and town gardens grown on vacant city lots, says W. B. Parker, assistant county agent.

Plans can be started in the fall for more fertile garden soils as one step in growing better garden crops the following season. When home gardeners do not have access to stable or barnyard manures composts become even more important as a means of soil enrichment when broadcast over the garden soil in the spring just before plowing or spading.

Parker adds that now is the time to gather organic matter for composting which may be found in the leaves from maple trees, oak trees, deciduous fruit trees. Clippings from the lawn may be used. Pea vines, bean vines, cabbage leaves, beet tops, carrot tops, and all other organic materials from the garden are valuable for composting. None should be destroyed or carted away in the garbage.

One method of making compost pile, according to Parker, is to pile leaves or other organic refuse about one foot deep covering the space set aside for the compost heap. Over this layer of leaves, straw, or other organic material spread a nitrogen fertilizer. This nitrogen fertilizer may be sulfate of ammonia, if available, cyanamide, nitrate of soda or ammonium nitrate at the rate of one-fourth to one-half pound per square yard of compost area. Also add superphosphate at the rate of one-fourth pound per square yard, and lime, preferably ground lime rock, at the rate of one-fourth pound for each square yard.

In the place of lime, one-half pound of wood ashes may be used per square yard. (Do not use more ashes than this.) Each successive layer of leaves or bulky organic material can receive the same amounts of fertilizers per square yard. Add water enough to make the layer moist. On this first layer of leaves, straw, or other organic material, place a thin layer of stable manure, poultry manure, or manure from rabbit hutches, or a layer of the richest soil available. This layer of manures or soil or both is important and necessary for the rapid decomposition of the compost pile. This layer should be one or two inches deep. Manures are desirable for this layer but not a necessity. Rich soil supplies soil bacteria which encourage the rotting of the materials. Add successive layers of organic material to the compost heap as already directed until it is completed. If rainfall is excessive, a roof can be provided to ward off or drain away the excess moisture which might leak valuable fertility from the compost pile. After the first two months have past mix the pile and

SAGINAW

Mr. and Mrs. Jim Callantine and Mrs. Helen Copp were involved in a car accident Friday night one mile south of here which sent all three to the hospital for treatment. Mr. Callantine, driver of the car, was the least seriously hurt having a bad cut on his head and leg injury. Mrs. Callantine will be confined in bed quite a while with an injured ankle which was broken in several places. Mrs. Copp suffered injury to her eye when her glasses broke and cut then do the same about once every month thereafter until spread on the garden.
