82ND AIRBORNE DIVISION

The 82nd Airborne Division was reactivated in 1942 having been known as the All American Division in World War I, gaining much fame because of the exploits of Sgt. Alvin York and it's search for the "lost battalion," operating as an infantry division. But whether afoot, by truck or in the air, the 82nd won fame as "always getting there."

The 82nd sailed for Casablanca in April, 1943, its components at that time being the 325th glider infantry regiment, the 504th and 505th Parachute Infantry regiments, the 319th and 320th glider field artillery regiments and the 376th and 546th Parachute field artillery battalions.

It first went into action when it launched the airborne invasion of Sicily on July 9, 1943. It moved 150 miles in seven days afoot capturing 22,000 prisoners. Leaving the 504th and 476th Parachute Artillery Battalions, it embarked for northern Ireland and subsequently led the parachute and glider attack on Normandy. Then it invaded Holland, and later resisted Von Rundstedt's thrust into the Ardennes. It received surrender of the entire 21st German Army of 150,000 troops. Distinguished Unit citations were awarded as follows: Headquarters and Headquarters Co., 82nd Airborne Signal Co.; 325th Glider Infantry; 1st Battalion, 504th Parachute; 3rd Battalion, 504th Parachute; 505th Parachute Infantry Reg.; 82nd Division Artillery Headquarters and Headquarters battery; 319th and 320th Glider Field Artillery Battalions; 376th Airborne Medical Co.; and 546th Anti-aircraft Artillery Battalion.
