Green Feed Cuts High Feed Costs For Poultrymen

Commercial feed costs in raising chickens and turkeys can be reduced 10 to 25 per cent by providing plenty of green feed throughout the season as shown in official experiments and by many growers, reports Noel Bennion, extension poultry specialist at Oregon State college. With mash and scratch grains at $4.50 to $5 per hundred, this is certainly the year to save money this way, says Bennion.

Winter rye, Sudan grass, sunflowers and corn are among the best non-irrigated crops to supply green feed in the late summer after early grass and sod pastures dry up. A true winter rye, such as Giant Winter, makes good late spring and summer pasture if seeded not later than early May. It keeps growing and stooling thru August and even September.

Sudan grass, seeded from May 15 to June 15, makes an abundance of green feed over the summer season. When it gets too tall and coarse clipping will start young, succulent growth again which is more palatable to poultry.

Sunflowers and corn, singly or planted together, are used extensively, especially for turkeys, as they provide a combination of green feed, shade and some mature seed. Sunflowers are usually planted not later than May 15 in rows 36 inches apart and with hills every foot, using 8 to 10 pounds of seed per acre. The same applies to corn except it is planted any time in May.

Some growers alternate sunflowers and corn every five to ten rows in the same field, Bennion finds. Turkeys start to graze this combination when the corn is about three feet high. They consume practically all of it, permitting the sunflowers to grow tall and produce more shade.

A higher priced substitute for real green feed is a good grade of alfalfa meal, alfalfa pellets or even alfalfa hay. Addition of molasses to alfalfa meal, 10 per cent by weight increases the palatability and consumption, Bennion adds.
