Bell-Ringer of Jungle

The campanero, or bell-ringer, is a pretty white bird that lives in the jungle, and is about the size of the blue jay. Its head is festooned with a black tubercle on the upper side of the long black bill, a club-shaped feather which the Indians say stands erect when it utters its song-of-the-bell. The bird's call sounds as if someone were striking a bell of the most melodious tone.
