Words of the Wise
Happiness is the goal of every normal human being. As it is given to few men to die happy, the best that man can hope and strive and pray for is momentary happiness during life, repeated as frequently as the cards allow.

Talent Alfalfa Seed Ready For General Sowing

Seed of the new Talent alfalfa developed at the southern Oregon branch experiment station will be available for limited general distribution this fall or next spring, announced Harold H. White, in charge of crops work, at the annual station field day held recently.

About 122 acres are expected to be harvested for seed this season on the station and by cooperating farmers who are growing the new variety to increase the seed supply. Much interest was shown in the new variety by the hundreds of farmers who toured the station during the field day.

Dr. Louis Gentner, entomologist and formerly in charge of the crops program, sketched the development of this variety from 1937 when it was one of numerous strains and varieties planted in test rows. It early showed its superiority and has since proved to be the best among 31 strains and 23 varieties for southern Oregon conditions. Limited tests have also been made elsewhere with good preliminary reports from Willamette valley and Klamath county trials, Gentner said.

Known originally merely as French strain No. 19274, it soon showed that it started earlier in the spring, grew later in the fall and showed regrowth after cutting much quicker than other sorts. These together result in an extra cutting each season compared with standard varieties.

Other advantages are that Talent grows so densely as to keep it more free of weeds and grass; it has a root system that adapts well to varying conditions, and it has proved so resistant to disease that stands 10 years old are still producing well. It is leafy and fine branched as a hay crop.

The name Talent was given in honor of the pioneer of that name from whom the town nearby was named and who was active in the early development of Rogue River valley agriculture.

Grain Suggested Aid Fattening Of Thin Lambs

Feeder lambs that did not get fat while with their mothers may require extra grain ration to make market weight, especially if they are now on poor pasture, Harry Lindgren, O.S.C. animal husbandry specialist, states.

Lambs that fall into this category are now weaned, weigh 75 pounds or less and are too thin to market. The question is, how to get those extra pounds of grain to bring the lamb up to 90 pounds or so?

Lindgren says lambs will fatten naturally on good pasture, but much forage during July does not qualify as "good". In such cases he recommends a supplemental whole grain ration such as barley. Whole barley is selling at about $50 per ton. Any other grains which can be bought at comparable prices, the specialist adds, will also prove satisfactory.

Lambs need to gain from one-third to one-half a pound a day to reach market weight efficiently.

Sudan grass is a good source of pasture for fattening lambs, Lindgren states, providing it has not headed out.

Freedom from parasites is also important. For control of worms, Lindgren suggests that one part phenothiazine be mixed with 10 parts salt.
