INCREASES 'GLAD' INCOME
A mid-western landscape contractor, Paul V. Baker, visiting Lebanon in 1945, became so interested in the Gladland Acres gladiolus farm that he bought it. He and his ex-GI son, James S. Baker, have increased the gladiolus acreage from 1 1/2 to 9—or from 480,000 to 2,200,000 quality bulbs. The informative Gladland catalogue (it sells for 25c) lists 572 varieties, not including 300 still on trial, or seedlings. Gladland ships world-wide to 7000 commercial and amateur growers. The Bakers say their rapid business progress was made possible by cooperation from the First National Bank of Lebanon.

WHITE STAG, LEADER IN SKI TOGS
Young college graduate Harold S. Hirsch in 1932 began designing clothing especially for fellow skiers. From the first they liked these functionally styled White Stag ski togs—made in his family's Hirsch-Weis Manufacturing Co., long-time maker of canvas products and outdoor work clothes. Today this still-growing Portland firm (renamed the White Stag Manufacturing Co.) is the world's largest manufacturer of ski togs...and its newer lines of sportswear are growing in popularity. To maintain leadership, Hirsch (left, with Charles Brown, head pattern maker) strives continually toward product improvement. For banking needs, White Stag utilizes "functionally styled" services of First National.

SERVES WEST COAST FISHERMEN
Friends were puzzled when H. L. Webster, a perfectionist in fashioning split bamboo fishing rods, moved from New England to Oregon. But Webster foresaw greater opportunity by serving the West Coast's anglers. He picked Gladstone as a central location, and a year ago began turning out hand-made rods for all types of sports fishing. Orders from sales outlets have grown steadily. Recently his H. L. Webster Rod Co. moved into larger quarters, equipped with precision beveling, tapering and laminating machines of his own design. Webster makes advantageous use of services of First National's Oregon City Branch to keep his company growing.
