ALTON SCHEDULES ORGAN CONCERTS

Radio station KOAC announces a new series of organ programs to be played by D. W. Alton, assistant professor of organ and theory in the School of Music at the University of Oregon. The new series of programs by Professor Alton direct from the organ in the auditorium of the Music building on the University campus will feature "Moments with Famous Organ Composers." Professor Alton has scheduled a series tracing the development of organ music from the Sixteenth Century to the present and will present programs covering four periods in the development of organ music: No. 1 - Pre Bach, No. 2 - The Bach Period, No. 3 - The Romantic and No. 4 - The Contemporary Organ Music. "Moments with Famous Organ Composers" will be presented on KOAC, the state station, Monday nights at 8 o'clock. The first broadcast was heard January 9 when University of Oregon programs were resumed following the Christmas vacation.

New Chemical IPC Hailed Success In Weed Control

The new alphabetical weed killer IPC, that was humorously hailed as the eventual successor to the lawn mower in press releases recently because of its grass growth capabilities, in reality shows tremendous promise as a selective grass killer in a variety of crops, according to Virgil Freed, associate agronomist, for the Oregon State college agricultural experiment station.

The work with IPC as a lawn grass growth regulator—it produces a stunted but uniform height grass that stays green—is in its earliest experimental stages. Freed says. But IPC's uses as a weed grass killer in legume seed crops, vegetable crops, strawberries, orchards and perennial grasses are advanced enough to tab the chemical nearly as valuable as 2,4-D.

Discovered in England but tried there and in other places without much success, IPC's remarkable possibilities have come to light almost exclusively through the efforts of Freed and his associates at the experiment station.

Freed cites a field trial on the Otto Bonhart farm near Medford as an example of IPC's worth. There a 60-acre field of Ladino clover had been taken over by grassy weeds to the point where the average yield of seed was only 80 pounds per acre. Application of IPC eliminated the grasses and the average yield jumped to 250 pounds per acre. Control of many grassy weeds in other crops has been almost as promising.

The best time for application of IPC is at the time of germination of the weeds. Because of its slight solubility in water, however, it is possible to control well established shallow-rooted annual grass plants by letting rainfall or overhead irrigation water carry the material into the rooting zone of the plant. When applied in oil, IPC effectively controls quackgrass.

Official name of the chemical, incidentally, is O-Iso-propyl-N-phenyl carbamate.

Backed By Truman

Emory Allison

DURING a press conference in Washington, President Truman announced that he hoped Missouri Democrats would nominate Emory Allison (above) as their candidate for the Senate. President pro tem of the Missouri State Senate, Allison, if selected, would oppose Sen. Forrest Donnell, St. Louis Republican seeking re-election. (International)

Stockmen Slate Discussion on Consumer Demand

A mutual problem of Western Oregon livestock association members and food retailers—keeping consumption of livestock above prewar levels—will be discussed at the group's fourteenth annual meeting in Corvallis, January 30, 31 and February 1. Charles A. Evans, Independence, president, has announced.

Featured speaker will be Rilea W. Doe, Oakland, Cal., vice-president, Safeway Stores incorporated.

Harry Lindgren, O. S. C. extension animal husbandry specialist, who also serves as livestock association secretary, says registration will begin at 11 a.m. Monday, January 30, in the Corvallis community center building at Fourth and Madison streets. Standing committee meetings will occupy much of the opening day program.

This year will see increased supplies of livestock products, especially pork, coupled with increasing competition among food products for public favor, according to Doe. Solving the problem of keeping livestock products on the move at high volume will require producers, processors, and distributors alike to give more careful attention to consumer demands, he adds.

Other speakers include Herman Oliver, veteran John Day livestock producer and a past president of the Oregon Cattlemen's association; President A. L. Strand, Oregon State college; and F. L. Ballard, associate director, agricultural extension service.

Entertainment will be headed by a horse show to be held in the O. S. C. armory the evening of January 30, sponsored by the Benton county Sheriff's posse. The program also includes a conducted tour of barns where visitors will see work being done by the animal husbandry and veterinary medicine departments.

Fourteen western Oregon county livestock associations will be represented at the three-day meeting. The annual banquet will be held the evening of January 31.

OSC Schedules 'Daddy' of All Dad Days Feb. 4

Oregon State College—The "daddy" of all Dads day at Oregon State college has been planned for February 4, with the Oregon State University of Washington basketball game in the huge new coliseum providing the main entertainment feature.

A Dads day newsletter has been sent to approximately 6500 Oregon State dads inviting them to take part in what Fred J. Waymire of Portland, president of the club, says will be the greatest Dads day ever held at the college.

This is the first time that such a program has been held in mid-winter, Waymire pointed out, previous affairs having been held in the fall at the time of a football game.

A luncheon Saturday noon, February 4, will replace the usual Saturday night banquet. The annual O. S. C. Dads club business meeting will follow. Dads will be guests at living groups that night just prior to the game. Visitors are advised to make immediate arrangements for tickets and to ask their sons or daughters to make luncheon reservations.
