Western Oregon Cited as Major Irrigation Area

Continued development of irrigation in western Oregon offers a major possibility for expanding the state's agriculture.

In the region, there is a potential irrigation project exceeding one million acres on which crop production can be doubled by the use of water, states Arthur S. King, O.S.C. extension soil conservation specialist.

Best available estimates indicate an area slightly more than 100,000 acres is now being irrigated. As late as 1928, the specialist states, just 2,500 acres in western Oregon were irrigated. He cites the two figures to show the tremendous irrigation expansion that has taken place during the past 20 years or so.

Need for irrigation in western Oregon was established by nature despite the fact that much of the area receives an average 40 inches of annual rainfall.

King states that during the best part of the crop growing season—May, June, July and August—longtime weather figures indicate an average of only 4 and one-half inches of rain. This, he adds, is just a fraction of total crop requirements.

Lasaters Bid Farewell to Midway

Richard L. Lasater, storekeeper, first class, USN, bids his wife, Wanda, and daughter Jana Lee, farewell as they leave the Pacific Island of Midway on the navy flying boat Mars. The families of naval personnel are being transferred from the base due to its inactivation by the navy. A small group of men will remain until June to complete inactivation of military facilities. Lasater, who is stationed at the naval air station, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Littleton Lasater of Cottage Grove, Oregon.

Meanwhile, possibilities of irrigation water use have been explored by the Oregon agricultural experiment station over a period covering 40 years. In brief, results show that irrigation increases yield on any crop that normally grows during the summer months.

Thus far, Willamette valley irrigation expansion has progressed largely on the basis of individual farm projects. Much of the area has been developed by sprinkler irrigation, but King states that surface or flood irrigation is used on a substantial acreage. This latter method is popular on larger farms devoted to pasture and field crops.

Approximately one-third of western Oregon's irrigated lands are now devoted to the production of vegetables for fresh market and processing. Another similar acreage is devoted to intensive crops including fruit, nuts, vegetable seed, hops, nursery stock, mint, bulbs and similar crops.

Now Is the Time To Spray Walnuts

Now is the time to apply the third early postbloom application of spray or dust for the control of walnut blight to grafted Franquette and Mayette orchards located on the Valley floor, according to County Extension Agent, W. B. Parker. Orchards located in the foothills above the Valley floor will not be ready to spray until some time later, which time will have to be determined by each grower for each particular orchard. In the past years, orchards located at elevations ranging from 100 to 800 feet above sea level have been anywhere from one to four days later than those on the Valley floor. For further information regarding spray or dust program contact the county extension agents' office at the Public Market Building in Eugene.

4-H Clubbers to Send 1800 to OSC Summer Session

Dates for the thirty-fifth annual 4-H club school to be held on the O.S.C. campus have been set for June 13 to 23, and as last year, a top limit of 1,800 has been set on enrollment, announces L. J. Allen, state 4-H club leader.

With local leaders, college students and county extension agents who will serve as counselors, total attendance will reach a 2,000 figure the state club leader adds. Additional professional persons from Oregon and out-of-state will take part in the instructional program.

Enrollment quotas on a county-by-county basis have again been set. These quotas are based on 4-H club project completions and enrollment at summer school in 1949. The top enrollment quota for the coming 10-day summer school has been given to Marion county—110 club members. Lane and Washington counties as well as the City of Portland will each be allowed to enroll 100.

As in preceding years, dormitory and classroom facilities are being turned over to the 4-H club members during their stay at the college. The college health service including doctors, nurses and complete hospital facilities will also be available in case of emergency.

Older club members will be housed in 13 sorority and 15 fraternity houses that are being taken over for the duration of the 4-H summer session. Younger club members—they must be 12 years of age to attend—will be housed in college dormitories.

All of Oregon's 36 counties will be represented by enrollees, most of whom will be attending on scholarships won in local, county or state competition. Value of the full scholarships is $20, Allen states. Those who pay their own way—there are a few of them—pay $24 for the 10 day stay which includes room and board as well as full participation in all activities.

Unchanged from past summer school sessions, morning hours will be devoted to classroom and laboratory instructional work. The afternoon program will include an assembly program followed by recreational activities.

Mrs. Eva Young and Mrs. Charles Peterson left last week for a 10 day visit at Goldendale, Washington, their old home. While there they will attend a picnic and family reunion of the Young family at "Mary Hill Castle." It has been 38 years since the ladies had been there.

The 8th grade graduation exercises and program was attended by a large crowd Thursday evening at the Blue Mountain play shed. Those graduating were: Mary Woodworth, Marian Seidel, Geneva Bettis, Jay Miller, Alvin Roby and James Patten. The Rev. Moore spoke and the whole school put on a program.

School was closed Friday at Blue Mountain with a picnic for the children and parents. The club that had 4-H work during the year put on a program and Jack Gorton, county 4-H club leader from Eugene was down and spoke and presented the awards for the year. Mesdames Hack Wooden, Verlin Ward and Geo. Wickendoll have been the leaders for the three clubs.

Callers Sunday at the Harry Castle home were Mr. and Mrs. Laurel Coons and Mr. Coon's mother of Coos Bay, Lawrence Palmer and Dick Henderson of Eugene and Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Frost of River Road, Cottage Grove.

Don Blackmore went back to work at Oakridge last week after being off for 5 months with a broken arm. Mr. and Mrs. Blackmore are moving to Oakridge.

Mrs. Eldon Jones and daughter Paula of Orick, California visited last week with Mrs. Jones' parents Mr. and Mrs. Sam Russum and also at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Jones.

Lester Rearick got his right leg broken below his knee Monday morning at the Beach Logging Co. near Lorane. He is in a Eugene hospital.
