YOU'RE TELLING ME!

LONDON corset maker Alexander Watson is on the outs with Paris dress designer Christian Dior for what Dior calls the "vertical line." The corset maker wants curves to stay.

Dior wants to get women straightened out.

But you can't blame Watson for plumping for curves. They're the foundation of his business.

At any rate, he doesn't want them all to go waist.

Straight or bent, women will still be creatures of mystery. There's no more authenticity in a vertical line than there is in a whalebone line.

The way things shape up, it'll still be the woman who pays. She'll either have her ups and downs or her ins and outs.

Cheerio and hip, hip!
