U. S.-AT-LARGE: This year the steel industry has for the first time passed the hundred million ton mark. The July first mark was 100,563,000 tons of steel, which is 14 million tons more than the steel output of all the rest of the world combined and 11 million tons more than was needed in 1944—peak year of World War II.

Yes, this is the same steel industry to which President Harry Truman referred when he issued an ultimatum demanding they speed up production or else the government would have to take over.
