ROUGH STREETS HAVE SOME COMPENSATIONS

Some families with small children are very much concerned over the speeding on some of the city streets. From the information we have, the charge of speeding can be leveled principally at the juvenile drivers. One resident went so far as to remark that he wished the streets by his place would remain rough so that speeding might be discouraged.

It is our belief that this one offense, which is both dangerous to life and property, can be stopped. It's up to the public. Speeding will never be stopped if those who witness excessive driving refuse to report the matter to the officers or if necessary sign a complaint. It's like the situation the community went through recently where dogs were damaging property, but those who suffered this damage refused to become involved with the dog owner, in many instances, and some even refused to give their names.

We heard of one plan, which is being tried in several communities and which sounds like it might work. In localities where the plan is operating the citizens have become so alarmed by the increasing number of traffic accidents, they have agreed to form a silent patrol. Silent patrolmen observe traffic violations in their neighborhoods and take the car license number of the offender. The license number is reported to the officer. If the officer gets a second complaint against a driver he warns the driver and if he gets a third, he investigates, and if the investigation warrants he files a complaint and prosecutes.

The plan could be made to work here, provided it was properly organized, otherwise it might backfire.

THE NEW WAY OF LIFE

(By Charles V. Stanton in Roseburg News-Review)

Roseburg's national guard unit, Company D, 186th infantry, is in Fort Lewis, Wash., today, starting a two weeks' annual encampment.

We hope it is firmly impressed upon these men that the instruction they are receiving may mean the difference between life and death; that their membership in the national guard gives them a better change for survival, in the event of combat experience, than men who have not had the advantage of advance training.

Casualty statistics from past wars furnish conclusive evidence that regular army and national guard members have a far higher survival rate than men with less previous schooling.

Most of us think of war casualties in terms of men killed or injured in battle. Actually more men are lost from accidents, behind-the-lines illness and other disability than from combat.

A man entering military service must learn a great many things more important to his survival than dodging enemy bullets and bombs. Our system of civilian, non-professional armies takes men from all walks of life. With few exceptions, these men have had their lives ordered for them up to that point. They have lived at home, have been cared for by mothers and wives, have had only limited discipline, have been exposed to average danger only.

Suddenly these recruits find themselves in camps composed entirely of men. Companions cannot be selected. A man must adjust himself to living with other men, with no women to wait on him. He must associate with men he would probably shun in civilian life, and in turn, be accepted by men who would ignore him under other circumstances.

Probably for the first time in his life he is entirely on his own. He must learn to conform to his associations and environment, must learn to submit to rigid discipline, must learn to take fatigue, hardship, discomfort, exhausting labor in stride.

The man who has the temperament for quick and easy adjustment to these changed conditions can have a lot of fun. Army life is particularly tough on the non-conformist.

Men who have worked as accountants, clerks, executives and in other office jobs suddenly find themselves in a new world made up entirely of exceedingly dangerous machines, where an act of carelessness or negligence can result in instant death or permanent injury. Living as large groups, rather than as individuals in a home, forces a man to learn new habits of sanitation and personal hygiene. Military records show that the prevalence of epidemic diseases, appendicitis, nervous disorders, etc., is particularly high in camps composed of new recruits. Within a short time men learn how to protect their health under mass living conditions.

Men enrolled in the national guard are not exposed to these changes as suddenly as are men who volunteer or are inducted without previous training. Guardsmen are taught military life gradually. While living at home they attend vocational sessions where they receive gradual military indoctrination. At intervals they attend encampments where for brief periods they are exposed to the rigors of army life. But, because of the short duration of the encampment, the requirements for adjustment are less extreme. Lessons are absorbed more leisurely. When the time comes that military service is required, these men make the transition from civilian to military life with far less physical and emotional disturbance.

Too, they have learned to use the weapons to which they are assigned. They have been thoroughly drilled in protective measures. They have far less to learn once they hit the firing line.

Records show that the percentage of survival rises rapidly after the first few days of combat. A man exposed to enemy fire quickly learns self-protection. Either he learns quickly or he becomes a casualty. After a few days the things he has learned improve his chances for survival. The casualty rate among men of one or two weeks' experience is far lower than among the inexperienced.

In these days of constant turmoil, when every man of military age is faced with the prospect of a call to arms, the national guard offers opportunity for every eligible young man to best serve his country and himself.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

The people on Thornton Corner Lane know a little of how it must have felt in the olden days to hear the cry "The Indians Are Coming!"

When our youngsters come running to tell us the City Police and Fire Department are having their annual picnic, we hurry to get them off the road. We forbid them to ride their bicycles or go visiting where they must use the road to get there. The livestock which is staked must be moved to keep them from breaking their chains.

I have lived on this lane fifteen years and I have never seen such speeding as that on Memorial Day by our City Police and Fire Department.

Speeding was not their only offense. They had to ruin a swimming hole where any number of little boys spent many a happy afternoon in good clean fun.

We expect our police force to be an example. If they could have seen how utterly disgusted two little boys were I believe they would have crawled off and hid.

How can we teach our children respect for the law when they see our officers try to wreck a car and failing to do so, push it in the swimming hole, then throw pop and beer bottles at it to break the glass?

One boy made the remark, "If they want to commit suicide, why don't they go to Korea and let some of our boys come home and enjoy a peaceful afternoon along the banks of a swimming hole?"

I have always understood it is against the state law to contaminate a stream but maybe our officers don't have time to read up on such things. I question if they know why Memorial Day was set aside.

These two little boys had been to town that morning and attended a Memorial Day service honoring our war dead and then marched in a parade. I am sure any one who has lost a loved one would much rather see the day celebrated in this way rather than the way our Police Force and Fire Department chose.

Cottage Grove's two Day Camps will begin next Tuesday morning with 148 girls registered for the six day periods. The camp will be held on different parts of the 4-H campground at Mosby Creek. The girls are to meet either at the Jefferson school or the city park at 9:15 the first morning and at 9:30 thereafter. The bus will also stop at Thornton Corners.

The Intermediate Camp will be under the direction of Mrs. John Walker and the Brownie Camp will be directed by Mrs. Art Nolt who have also acted as Day Camp representatives doing most of the pre-camp planning. Mrs. A. G. King has assisted in taking care of transportation. Mrs. O. J. Theil and Mrs. A. E. McKenzie took care of registration. Mrs. J. H. Minkler will be co-ordinator of the council Day Camp will oversee all 18 Day Camps in the area.

In case of hard rain, the camp will not be held that day but the girls should contact their leaders to make sure. The campers should take a cup and sack lunch the first day and thereafter according to their unit plans. A jackknife will come in handy especially among the older girls.

Tuesday evening, June 5, a court of awards and a Senior Scout advancement program was held at the city park. Girls from the two 6th grade troops, two 7th grade troops and the eighth grade troop received badges they had earned. The eighth graders then "flew up" to Senior Scouts. Pins were awarded by Mrs. Robert Beach representing Beach Logging Co., as co-sponsor of the troop. The pins were pinned on by the girls' fathers.

Mrs. Frank Richardson was presented a "retiring" gift from her troop as she will not be their leader next year.
