13,000 homemakers, saw a 5-year-old dream come true at the conference. The council's $45,000 goal for a cooperative living unit for college girls went "over the top" when Mrs. Norman Lunde, Azalea House chairman, presented a $10,000 check to Mrs. Mabel Mack, state extension agent, and she in turn gave the check to Dr. A. L. Strand, president of the College.

This sum was raised among extension unit members, farm organizations, and business concerns throughout Oregon by a state board of trustees, headed by Mrs. Lunde and county Azalea House Fund chairmen. Mrs. Mack served as adviser.

Dr. Strand said Azalea House will be built by September 1952. It will accommodate about 50 girls. County extension committees may select one or more girls from their counties to live in the house. The girls will be chosen on scholarship, leadership, and character, with preference given to 4-11ers.

New House Dress Design Praised By Oregon Women

One thousand hour wearing tests of functional house dresses designed at Oregon State college have been completed and results of the tests compiled. Mrs. Clara Edaburn, associate home economist for the OSC home economics experiment station, has announced.

The tests were made as part of a joint research project by the OSC experiment station and extension service. Results of the wearing tests will be used as a basis for recommending changes in dress designs.

Oregon women who wore the dresses an average of 11 hours a day have agreed that the long bias gusset, which is the principal feature of the experimental dresses, has proved its worth as a practical and functional addition to work dress design, Mrs. Edaburn reported.

The gusset is a bias piece of material which replaces a piece of equal length and width at the underarm sleeve seam. This change allows greater reach and freedom of movement, explained Mrs. Edaburn. Both set-in and kimono sleeves proved satisfactory in the tests.

The test garments were worn to do a variety of tasks. Inspection of the dresses after 1000 hours of wear revealed no broken stitches in any gusset seam.

The long bias gusset is adapted to a number of uses. It may be inserted in a commercial pattern and garments which have become too small can be reclaimed for comfortable wear by adding the gusset. Men's sport shirts made with the same method are well adapted for active sports wear such as for bowling or golfing.

Patterns incorporating the bias gusset into the design will be offered to commercial pattern companies and dress manufacturers.

Music Teachers Attend Workshop

Mrs. Helen Hagen attended the June Music Workshop, which was sponsored by the Eugene district of the Oregon Music Teachers association.

Newest development in two-piece clothes is the "dome" type of lid. This has an upward bulge or "dome" which is drawn down when a vacuum is created in the jar. After the jar cools, this type of lid is easily tested for seal by pressing the center with the fingers. The jar is sealed if the "dome" stays down.

Sealing failures are caused by lack of vacuum in jars. Lack of vacuum is caused by: (1) Using jars, lids and bands which do not fit together snugly enough to permit an airtight seal. Rough edges on jars may create leakage. (2) Using lids a second time. (3) Using warped or rusty bands. (4) Leaving too much head space when filling jars. (5) Packing food into jars so tightly that liquid cannot fill the spaces between the pieces of food. (6) Failure to knife in adjusting lids and bands. (8) Unreliable methods of canning or carelessness in following the manufacturers' instructions.

Proper Jars, Lids Will Insure Good Canning Results

Good luck with home canning is not a chance happening, but the result of adherence to the rules of good canning procedure. One of the first rules is to have the proper supplies.

Regular home-canning jars are made to withstand high temperature and are the best assurance for airtight seal. They are low in cost and may be used repeatedly.

Commercial jars are light in weight and the sealing surface is easily damaged when they are reused.

Before being used all jars should be examined for nicks, cracks, or sharp edges on the sealing surface.
