NAM and Politics

The other day a resident remarked that he was not going to vote for a certain republican candidate for president because this candidate was endorsed by the National Association of Manufacturers. We doubt if this candidate is endorsed by the NAM, but being endorsed by any group or association ought not to be a stigma, unless the group is immoral or dishonest. The NAM is not without its faults and we hold no brief for the organization, but we recognize some members of the group have some merits.

For instance they can mass produce both armaments and civilian necessities. Our mass production methods have played a major share in winning two wars and we believe this is generally an accepted fact. We have more autos, more refrigerators, more radios, more phones and more labor saving devices than any nation on earth because of the mass production ideas promoted by the NAM. It may be politically expedient to make the NAM a whipping boy in a political campaign, but to destroy its members would be to destroy our way of life as we know it.

We don't like the bigness of any organization, because we would feel as many workers feel that we were only a small cog in a big machine, nor do we particularly appreciate mass farming as we know it now. At the same time we recognize any radical changes in our economy would be disastrous to us.

Crop Too Big

The crop of swivel chair generals in the Pentagon at Washington is far too big, if our information is correct. At least the over-generalized army has been a popular topic for a month or six weeks now. Army statistics reveal that there is a general for every 2,000 enlisted men or thereabouts. This number compares with about 6,000 enlisted men to every general in the last world war. If this trend continues it looks like our security is going to be increasingly expensive and that the army has joined the other bureaucrats at the national capitol.

The expense of supporting generals alone is not so bad, but generals must have aides, orderlies and cars and sometimes airplanes.

It is high time that we give a little thought to cleaning some of the bureaucratic barnacles from the national capitol as well as looking into the moral corruption which seems to be running rampant there. As a stockholder in the world's biggest business you can have your say in November of this year.

Leader Needed in National Crisis

So far America has been fortunate when a crisis has faced the nation, a real leader has appeared from somewhere to take charge of affairs and lead us out of trouble. We have reached the place in our national affairs when we are badly in need of a national leader. Up to the present time, he has not appeared. A California republican club is said to have passed a resolution recently which calls for forgetting the individual and promoting the nation. This club rightly is not interested in individuals, their reward for party service or their advancement, but rather the welfare of the nation. They want the individual best qualified and best fitted to head the nation.

We feel as many others feel that politics, graft and corruption have about wrecked the most successful democracy on the face of the earth. We better forget politics and be Americans first, otherwise there will soon be no America.

Leave Us Face It

Certainly you are busy. Work is piling up and you fume and fuss and pitch in and work, but it piles even higher. What the heck! Slow down! You could live to be as old as Methuselah and still find work piling up on you. One man, harried, hurried and explosive over his work, was advised to work six hours a day instead of eight and to spend one day a week in a cemetery.

"But what," asked the man, "shall I do in a cemetery?" "Just loaf," sez the Doctor. "Get acquainted with some of the people who are there permanently. They didn't finish their work either. Nobody does, you know."

So, slow down today and enjoy life—before you go down permanently. Please read this again.—The Forest Log.

Letters to the Editor

To the Editor: "General Mark Clark has performed a service to the American people by asking for withdrawal of his nomination as ambassador to the Vatican. If further attempts are made to establish a United States embassy at the Vatican, they will be opposed with the same determination with which Americans of all creeds have opposed this unfortunate nomination, now happily withdrawn. One good result of the Clark nomination has been free discussion without rancor or ill will, of the American principle of freedom of religion written into our constitution and of the policy of separation of church and state designed to protect that principle. There is a good deal more straight thinking on these questions today than there was a year ago."

Dear Editor: I sure hope you print this, as I would like to have our police officers make a public statement as to why they can do things they fine others for. Friday afternoon, February 1, a neighbor and I came out of Gierau's store on West Main. We had our arms full of groceries and were inside the yellow line. Down Main street came an officer of the law driving at a good rate of speed and never halting. I had not stopped, he would have hit us as he was too close to have stopped when we did. Now what irks me is a child is taught the yellow lines are safety zones, and to have an officer do that to our children safe? And are officers supposed to run thru a yellow line? I don't know and there are lots of people like me, so would like to hear about it. Maybe we should teach our officers the safety rules along with everyone else. Signed a taxpayer. Mrs. G. A. King

'Spiritual Renaissance' Is Named Key To World Problems by Music Dean

The only way to solve the world's problems is through "spiritual renaissance," an avenue of which is music, according to Dean Theodore Kratt of the University of Oregon music school.

Dean Kratt spoke before the Baxter Fellowship young adult group Sunday night at the Methodist church.

"People don't have time for things of the spirit," he said. But about a dozen young couples, most of them parents, took time to hear this tall, mustached music dean tell about "things of the spirit" music and its appeal.

"Many people feel music thru the feet instead of thru the intellect," he said. "The greatest enemies to the art of music are those people who feel music no farther than the ankle."

"Many persons have a natural appreciation for music, some need to study to get appreciation," he explained.

He took one simple melody to illustrate tones, some long and some short to give it meaning. He added some harmony to give what he called "greater meaning." Then rhythm, the third element, "to give the music personality."

He also demonstrated different kinds of rhythm, such as a march, waltz and a hymn. He said that so-called "hot" music overemphasized the rhythm element of music, that good music contained an "equal amount or proportionate amount of the elements working together."

He also explained the terms "popular" and "classical" remarking that any well-known piece is popular, while classical pieces referred to certain periods and composers in the music world.

Illustrating the possibilities of introducing good music to people, he said that in Rolling Mills in Ohio he dressed in overalls like the men and played Beethoven to them.

"They called it great stuff and said, 'Where have we been?'" "But I didn't tell them it was Beethoven," he added smiling.

Speaking of church music, Dean Kratt said that he felt sacred music should be objective and have dignity. He played what he called his favorite, "Come Thou Almighty King" to illustrate. He explained he had played this to 3,000 soldiers in England during World War II where he was serving with Special Services.

He said again that church hymns should appeal to the intellect and not to the ankle, that they should not cheapen religion.
