A near capacity crowd was on hand for the annual amateur hour at the high school auditorium at Lorane Friday evening, April 25.

Winners in the four divisions who received prizes were: preschool through fourth grade, first place, Sharen Hutchison with an accordion solo; second, Gail and Gary Barnes whose song "Yes Sir, That's My Baby" was easily the most popular number of the evening with the audience.

Fifth through eighth grades was won by Karen Lobek, first place with a piano solo, and a duet by Joyce and Joan Wilmer taking second place. In the high school group first prize went to a trio composed of Dorothy Ladd, violin; Martha Christopher, guitar, and Jimmy Johnson, vocalist. A violin duet by Richard and Claudette Payne was second place winner.

Arthur Kragenbrink was first place winner in the adult division with a reading of "Deck of Cards," with second place going to The Gillespie Corners band. Both winners returned their prize money to the Parents-Teacher club who were sponsors of the event.

Several popular numbers that were not prize winners were a square dance by the third and fourth grades, comedy song by the fourth grade, and a girls trio in the high school group. Several accordion numbers also received much applause.

Mrs. Ruth Emry of Drain, accordion teacher, played two numbers which were not included in the competition.

Following the show the junior and senior classes held a sale of sandwiches, cake and coffee which netted them about $14.

lumber prices go down

THE ILLUSTRATION SHOWN indicates how the principle of supply and demand works in establishing lumber prices. When the demand for lumber is big, the supply goes down and prices naturally tend to go up. When demand falls off, the supply increases and lumber prices go down.

The lumber business is highly competitive. There are about 53,000 saw-mills in the United States, all manufacturing 2x4s and other standard sizes and grades of lumber items. There are some 6,000 wholesalers who, in turn, sell to over 26,000 retail lumber dealers.

Under such a competitive marketing system, no single company or group of companies can possibly control the price of lumber. Prices are determined by the law of supply and demand. In order to maintain continuing markets for its forest products, the Weyerhaeuser Timber Company must maintain proper product quality, provide the best in customer service and meet competitive market prices.
