Baby Chick Assn. To Hear About Fresh Broilers

Fresh broiler marketing as carried out by the Washington Cooperative Farmers association, Seattle, will be discussed by Fred Hunt, manager of the firm's poultry department at the thirty-second annual meeting of the Oregon Baby Chick association at Oregon State college Thursday, June 26.

President Frank Erikson, Hillsboro, has announced that general sessions starting at 10 a.m. daylight saving time will be held in the Withycombe hall auditorium. The annual meeting of the Oregon Poultry Improvement association headed by P. A. Gent, Eugene, will be staged the following day.

LUMBER SEASONING SCHOOL TO BE HELD AT OSC IN AUGUST

'Instruction for the six-day course will consist of lectures, laboratory exercises, demonstrations, and actual operation of the laboratory's drying equipment, Dunn said.

Management, supervisory and sales staff personnel from lumber industries as well as kiln operators are expected to enroll in the course.

Enrollment will be limited to 25 persons. A $50.00 fee will be charged. Application forms and additional information may be obtained by writing to the laboratory, 17th and May streets, Corvallis.

Fir Food Wastes Found Good Feed For Laying Hens

Wood sugar molasses can be used to advantage as a feedstuff for laying hens, poultry scientists at the Oregon State college agricultural experiment station report.

The trials with laying hens are a part of a series conducted by the station to determine the value of wood sugar molasses—made from Douglas fir wood wastes—for future use as animal feeds. Earlier tests with dairy cattle, swine and sheep produced favorable results also.

When fed at a 7½ percent level as a replacement for an equal amount of cereal grain, the wood sugar molasses brought an increase in egg production along with improved hatchability. Hens ate the molasses readily and compared favorably in every way with non-molasses groups.

Results of the trials with the promising wood waste material are reported in the latest issue of Poultry Science, national poultry research publication, by Wilbur T. Cooney, associate poultry husbandman, and J. E. Parker, head of the poultry department.

Incorporation of the wood sugar molasses in the diet brings an increased consumption of feed which could explain the increased egg production, according to Cooney and Parker. The increased feed costs with the 7½ percent molasses diet are more than offset by the extra eggs produced.

A 15 percent level of wood sugar molasses was found to be too much. Egg production suffered, the margin of profit was reduced and droppings became heavy and sticky. While an initial mild diarrhea was noted in the 7½ percent trial birds, it was overeome with no apparent ill effects.

Funds for carrying on the hen feed trials were provided by the Oregon Forest Products laboratory. They also cooperated with the Forest Utilization Service of the Pacific Northwest and Range experiment station in securing the wood sugar molasses used in the tests.
