U. S. HELPS BURMA GET GOOD CROPS

Rangoon, Burma—Crop yields are higher in the Shan States of Burma today and the equipment the Shan farmers are using is better adapted to its purposes because a former Tennessee county agent has personally brought American agricultural know-how to the Shan hill people.

He is Otto Hunerwadel, a member of the staff of the Mutual Security Agency's Special Technical and Economic Mission (STEM) to Burma.

With a background of 18 years as a county agent in Tennessee, Hunerwadel is doing in Burma what he did for so long in the United States. He goes into the "backwoods" areas of Burma's Shan States, talking to the Shan farmers individually and in small groups.

SURE WAY TO GET VOTE

The one sure way to get out a heavy vote in our presidential elections would be to tell the citizens they can't.

The Federal deficit will reach a new peak by the end of this calendar year, says the authoritative business magazine, Dun's Review.

Reformers are folks who see only the mistakes of others.

U. S. NURSES FACE ENEMY FIRE TO CARRY ON WORK OF AIDING ASIAN PEOPLE

Saigon, Indochina — Hedgehopping by plane over communist-held areas in Northern Vietnam has become just part of the job for two American nurses working for the American economic aid program in this Indochinese state. In order to get from Hanoi to Nam Dinh to demonstrate new nursing techniques for the care of civilian war wounded, they flew in a small twin-engine biplane which hedgehopped at an altitude of from 50 to 100 feet to avoid sniper fire from Viet Minh communists.

The nurses are Margaret Denham, of Temple, Texas, and Helen Roberts, of Toledo, Ohio. They went to Southeast Asia last August to join the public health staff of the American Mutual Security Agency aid mission.
