BIRTHDAYS OBSERVED AT MONTGOMERY HOME

(Mrs. Gale Roby, London Correspondent.) A get-together of good friends and neighbors at the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Lyle Montgomery on south Sixth street celebrated the birthday of Fred Harris on July 25, with gifts and merriment that during the evening turned the tables in a surprise gesture to present Mrs. Montgomery with gifts for her own birthday, July 27.

The party was held with a pot-luck picnic with tables set out in the yard for an evening supper. A baseball game followed with most of the guests participating until dusk, when they trooped indoors to enjoy music on the accordion by Mrs. Fred Harris and exhibition dancing led by Mr. Harris.

Attending the party were Messrs. and Mesdames Fred Harris, Alton Robinson, Eugene Harris, Morris Harwell and their families. Also Harwell's niece Shirley Jean and Lyle Montgomery.

OSC Economists See Slump Signs, Not Big Depression

Even though many signs of recession are showing in 1952, it isn't likely that the slump will be either very severe or very widespread the rest of this year, agricultural economists of the Oregon State college extension service conclude.

Many Oregon farmers already are being hurt by the downward trend, economist M. D. Thomas points out in the latest issue of "Oregon Agricultural Situation and Outlook." Strawberry and cherry raisers, chicken growers and wool producers are feeling the pinch this year. Markets for other inflation leaders of 1951, like beef, are sagging too.

But the odds for the last half of 1952 seem to favor some recovery rather than further recession, Thomas believes. There is even a possibility that considerable inflation could come if a combination of events sparked another spending spree and brought the potential purchasing power into the market.

Farmers are advised to keep close watch of supply, demand and price conditions during the next few months so they may market their products to best advantage. In most instances, holding for the past season's high prices seems likely to bring disappointment.

As of July, however, there seems to be little reason to accept drastically lower prices on products in storable form, except where carry-over is large or production is much greater than last year.

Five things are largely responsible for the slow down, Thomas writes. They are: inventories have accumulated to worry processors, manufacturers, bankers and business men; buying splurges after the war have left consumers well stocked; consumers, conscious of high prices and big debts, are spending less and saving more; and incomes and employment are not rising as rapidly as a year ago.

There is no reason to get panicky over the situation, however, the economists feel, because "for nearly every weak spot in the economy, there still is a firm one."

Animal Diagnostic Lab at OSC Starts Service in August

The animal diagnostic service recently created at Oregon State college will begin full-scale operations sometime in August in the new animal diagnostic laboratory, according to Dr. L. R. Vawter, veterinarian in charge of the laboratory.

Completion of the modern laboratory facilities is expected shortly, although equipment shortages may delay the opening. Meanwhile, the diagnostic service will continue to operate on the third floor of the OSC poultry-veterinary building.

The diagnostic laboratory and veterinary research unit at OSC will team up to fight disease outbreaks and solve disease problems in Oregon livestock. No treatment of animals will be given at the diagnostic laboratory. The service consists of only of autopsy and diagnosis of infected diseases in horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, and miscellaneous smaller animals such as rabbits or fur bearers. Poultry disease investigations are conducted by the OSC poultry disease laboratory.

Dr. Vawter has requested that farmers consult local veterinarians or state or federal veterinarians before bringing sick or dead animals to the laboratory when contagious diseases are suspected. Transportation of animals with infectious diseases may constitute a real danger to the livestock industry, he declared.

Oregon State college, the Oregon livestock associations and the Oregon Veterinary Medicine association has agreed to a fee of $4 for each laboratory examination. The money will be used to pay operating expense of the laboratory.

Located in the southwest part of the OSC campus near the present poultry-veterinary building, the laboratory houses a large autopsy room, cold storage rooms for holding animals overnight, laboratories for examination of tissue and organs, and other miscellaneous facilities. A feature is the large gas-fired blast furnace in which all infectious material is burned to prevent spreading of disease.

ist OSC Ag. Planning Meeting Report Issued

The first of 12 detailed reports prepared by committee at the recent state agricultural planning conference at Oregon State college is off the press with the other 11 reports scheduled for publication between now and early September.

The dairy committee report is the first to be issued in bulletin form. The coming 11 publications will deal with agricultural relations, farm crops, farm forestry, fur farming, horticulture, land economics, livestock, poultry, rural life, soil and water resources and specialty crops. Present problems and recommendations for future development in each field are outlined.

Copies of the dairy report are now available from county extension offices or from the college. Other reports will be distributed from the same sources in the next few weeks.

ANNUAL WCTU PICNIC

The annual picnic of the Women's Christian Temperance Union will be August 7 in the city park. Time is 12 o'clock for the pot-luck dinner. All who are interested are invited to attend.

GOOD HEALTH

Answer to Question No. 1:

1. The Sloan-Kettering Institute points out that, since cancer is like a terrible weed, the destruction of the disorderly growth of cancer cells follows the weeds (surgery); burning out the weeds (irradiation); altering the soil (changing body fluids by giving steroid hormones); killing the weed in the soil (giving treatment to kill cancer cells, yet leaving normal cells unharmed); exploding weeds with chemicals (use of chemicals which explode cancer cells). Every gardener knows weeds are easiest to destroy when they first appear. The same is true of cancer.

Answer to Question No. 2:

2. It used to be that pneumonia would keep you in the hospital for as long as five weeks. Now, because of modern drugs and techniques, many cases of pneumonia can be discharged from the hospital in five days. Although hospital costs have risen, because modern hospitals, adapted to high standards of medical care, are expensive to operate, this reduction in the length of hospital stay has actually lessened the expense of illness.

Answer to Question No. 3:

3. Authorities say 40 per cent of all days lost from work are due to colds. Assuming a $7 a day loss in earnings or productive capacity, colds cost $420,000,000 a year on this basis alone. In addition, they often lead to more expensive and more serious illnesses.
