PORKY PACKED PUNCH

Wayne Batchelor was happy; the girl had said, "Yes" and his sow had six little porkies.

The evening they had intended announcing their engagement Wayne put on his new suit. As he carefully set his snap-brim hat on his head the dogs began barking. In the beam of a floodlight he saw one of his baby pigs scot through the garden into a thick clump of brush. He dashed through the house.

"One's out," he hollered to his mother.

"Your new suit! Wait for morning!" his mother warned. The backdoor slammed.

He peered through the dark branches. Saw a movement. Thought. Took off his coat, held it in front of him and dove in. He had it, also a noxious scent. It was a skunk.

His coat hangs on a limb. The girl held her nose, dropped the ring and ran. Porky's in the pen, the ring's in the box and the scent is everywhere. Moral: look before you dive, then don't.

Quadrennial Meet Of Old Timers At Godard Home

The seventh quadrennial meeting of the so-called Godard gang was held November 15 at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. L. Godard.

Introducing the usual meal, for which Mr. Godard always is the chief chef, was grape fruit juice served in myrtle wood goblets fashioned by Mr. Godard and presented to the guests. Vying for top billing were a vocal solo by George Jacobsen and a showing by Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Lombard of pictures taken during their recent trip in Europe. Mr. Jacobsen has given the same solo at every session of the "gang" since its formation, and always makes a hit.

The first session of the group was held in 1925, while Mrs. Godard was away from home. Mr. Godard, a cook of some reputation, invited 12 Masonic friends to an alleged slumber party. Four years later he repeated the invitation to the same group and has continued to call the group together every four years. William Morelock was the only one added to the original group. Living members of the original group are: S. L. Godard, S. L. Mackin, A. C. Spriggs, Elbert Bede (Portland), Vinal Randall, William Thum, past masters of Cottage Grove Masonic lodge; H. W. Lombard and George Jacobsen. These also were members: Ray Trask, Elbert Smith, A. A. Richmond, also past masters; C. E. Frost and William Morelock.

This year for the first time, wives of the men also were guests. All living members of the original group were present except William Thum, who was kept at home by the illness of Mrs. Thum.
