Teacher Career Week

March 28 to April 3 is "Teacher Career Week," set aside by the Oregon Educational Association to stress the need for 17,000 additional teachers in the state within the next ten years. The public is urged to focus attention of desirable young people on the need of teachers and the opportunities of the teaching profession.

Resident births in the state increased from 13,468 in 1930 to 39,900 in 1953. The infant population has tripled and a tremendous growth is contemplated for the next ten years. Public school attendance is expected to increase from about 290,000 pupils to slightly under 500,000.

The association says the state needs about 1,500 new teachers each year, half of this number to keep up with the growing school enrollment and half to replace teachers retiring. Only about half the teachers needed are being trained in Oregon teacher training schools.

New teachers must be found, if the public schools are to operate. In connection with this week, the Oregon Education Association at 1530 S. W. Taylor St., Portland 5, Oregon has all the background material needed to solve the teacher shortage, if public opinion can be aroused as to the need.

Flowers are blooming and the grass is growing, but we can't believe that it is spring for the reason that we have not heard the merits or demerits of daylight saving time discussed. Maybe this is a dead issue.
