REFLECTIONS

Dear Dad, Mom and Sis:

You must have been disgusted with me; a lazy, useless, brainless kid. Dad, you tried so hard to make me a good Sunday School student; I played. I chose the wrong associates; remember the time I invited Tom to go with us on a Sunday School picnic? Sis cried, was ashamed. Mom was furious as she said, "He's tough, a petty gangster. You must not associate with him." Now I'm a soldier in Korea and found another Tom.

Karl, a belligerent, gangland tough adopted me. I hated his 5 ft. 10 inch bull-like, battle scarred body as he told me of his battles, girls and drinking. He prefaced every sentence with "G— D— good," and strung profanity through his remarks like beads on a string. He was odious. I despised him. As he told me about his exploits with women I told him about dad as my Sunday School Teacher. He sneered, "G— D— sissy." I could have torn him apart but said, "Brave men do not take the name of God in vain." He bristled, fists doubled, good eye snapped, every muscle was tense; the fire died and he laid a finger on his swollen lip and mumbled, "G— D— I wish I had a dad." I saw his soul; he wasn't tough but lonesome.

The morning we were being sent up as replacements I attended an open air Service in full battle regalia. When the Chaplain said, "Amen," I picked up my rifle, stood up and staggered. Karl was beside me. Tears were in his eyes and a frog was in his throat as he said, "G— D— good; is your dad like him?"

Karl was hurt, bad. He looked up at me, stammered and said, "I'm going to be like your dad, Amen." He's on his way home now, promised to call you. Be nice to him.

Your son, Don.
