State Parks Used Heaviest in 1954

SALEM (Special) — The Oregon State Highway Commission announced this week the heaviest annual usage on record in Oregon's State Parks during the past year.

Over 5,800,000 persons took advantage of new facilities, redeveloped and newly developed state park areas to smash all existing park records for attendance in a single year. Previous record attendance in Oregon's parks was seen in 1952 when over 5,300,000 persons used the areas for various types of recreation.

Though a great number of out-of-state visitors have used Oregon's parks during the year, the Highway Commission stressed the fact that the increase in attendance in Oregon's parks during the past several years is mostly due to a larger number of local patrons being able to use them. Increased local patronage is possible largely because of the development program in existing parks which was begun during the past five years by the Parks Division, under the jurisdiction of the Oregon State Highway Commission.

Ninth in U. S.
The Commission also mentioned the fact that Oregon's park attendance ranked ninth in the United States as shown in the last report of the National Park Service covering state parks throughout the nation. At the same time, the report shows that, though attendance was large, the Commission and Parks Division was able to keep expenditures within the budget and provide the public with clean, pleasant and modern facilities.

The National Park report further shows that during the period 1948-1953, attendance in the nation's parks increased 48 percent—in that same period, Oregon's park attendance, under the development program, increased 112 percent.

Improvements Aid Increase
At Cape Lookout State Park, near Tillamook, on the Oregon coast, which was dedicated during 1954 and first opened to overnight use during the year, attendance figures jumped from a mere trickle to over 75,000. Among reasons for the increase in attendance was the development of roads into the park, better signing provided by the Highway Department, and opening of modern facilities for both picnickers and campers. Day users totaled 67,218 during the year and overnight campers 8,169. Over 150,000 are expected to use the park in 1955. Other parks with similar facilities show equally increased attendance, particularly since the development program has been under way, according to the Highway Commission.

Development and attendance at Oregon's State Parks were not confined to any one area during the year, showing the trend by the Highway Commission to provide the public with facilities wherever the need is greatest.

The Parks Division is anticipating that the park visitor of the future will have different desires in out-of-door recreation than those visiting Oregon State Parks in 1954. Thus, every effort will be made to provide the type of recreational developments which will satisfy such needs as they can be determined.

MEMORY Lane

THE LINE IS BUSY
Remember the old crank telephone that hung on the wall? The contraption was very convenient, and it circulated the news about as fast as your radio does today. Every time Effie's beau phoned, the neighbors knew all about it as soon as Effie did. No wonder the line was always busy. Remember?
