Reflections . . .

Flag Day June 14th

It was September 1777. The first frost was white on the ground. Men shivered behind earthworks when suddenly cannon roared. "Charge!" rang out. As they climbed out of the trench the men saw a beautiful flag fluttering. The red and white stripes rippled and the thirteen stars on the blue field were symbols of all they held sacred. That emblem electrified them, sent them to victory. That flag has not changed, new stars are added but the stripes—red for daring and white for purity—stand today as they did at the battle of Brandywine.

Display your flag. Hang it with the blue field closest to your heart. It is the emblem of everything we own, all of our thoughts, all of our ideals, our schools, churches, postage stamps and the thousands of things we take for granted. Wherever you are, whatever you may be doing, display the flag of the United States of America. That's you, me and a hundred million more like us.
