Reflections . . .

We're Building A Floor

Just as the inconceivably deep gorges in the sea are being filled with minute particles of soil, there are chasms in our life that we may fill with kindnesses.

When we help a friend over a rough place, lend a hand to one in distress, dry the tears of a child, give good cheer to one who has passed his three score years, we make a floor of deeds that will endure for ages yet to come. . . e.g., the father who by being honorable teaches honor to his son, the mother who by example guides her daughter, the teacher who uses kindness to instruct a pupil, the great moral leaders who set fire to our ambitions, the Sportsmen and their creed of good fellowship—these people are filling a gorge that we may have a better world tomorrow.

Those who follow us will find no more than we put in let them discover the purest threads of gold.
