Everybody's Job

There is a new movement going on today which, though not broadly publicized, holds immense significance for every citizen. Definite headway is being made toward getting the federal government out of competition with tax-paying private commercial enterprise. Short of providing adequate national defense, this is the most important thing from the standpoint of keeping our country the sort of place in which we want to live.

Recently 24 synthetic rubber factories were turned over to private industry for a net profit to the government of $35,000,000. A bill has been introduced which would get the federal government out of the city-running business at Oakridge, Tennessee, and Richland, Washington and save the taxpayers $1,500,000 annually.

An article in Time magazine states that "in scores of other nooks and crannies of government, less dramatic ways have been found to eliminate competition with private business. The defense department has shut down 24 scrap metal operations, 7 bakeries, 9 laundries, a chain factory, a caustic soda plant, 4 cement mixing plants, a tire retreading plant, 2 garden nurseries and 4 ice plants." The federal government's $40,000,000 investment in over 100 different types of tax-exempt businesses is getting smaller. It's a heartening thing to see somebody patching a few of the cracks in the foundations of our free enterprise economy.

As long as a person earns his income through self-employment or by working for another private citizen, his voting decisions are based upon what he thinks best for the country or the community, and they do not have a direct relationship to his means of livelihood as when he depends on government employment for work.

To keep our political liberty and our representative form of government, the people must maintain their right to make a living without regard to political consideration. That means curtailment of government in business, and that's everybody's job.—Industrial News Review.
