REFLECTIONS
A Child Reflects Tomorrow

A child may find more avenues for discovering mischief than all the streets in New York. "Borrows" more tools from his dad than can be found in a catalogue and finds more slippery rocks, more poison oak, more spiders, bigger grubs and ferocious ants than ten adults.

That child is a generous slice of delicious apple pie; he gets into mischief not to be naughty but to find an answer. When he "borrows" tools he wants to express himself. A rock is something solid upon which to climb to greater heights, poison oak is a beautiful plant, grubs have a lowly job to do and ants teach a lesson of industry. That child is reflecting his tomorrow from a picture that only he can draw.

P.S. There can be no greater gift to you than our pledge: confidential business and professional relationship.
