The Real Issue of the November Election

From here on out, you may hear increasing talk of men and issues as time approaches for the national political conventions and the general election in November. If the politicians have their way they will try to make you believe that the real issue hinges on our foreign relations, or racial integration, of the farm program or the issues of labor, but if you believe any of these you are pretty cold on what the average American, or perhaps we should say, the average American parent is thinking about.

We may believe that the above named issues have their importance in our way of life, but to him or them we should say, the important thing is that with the passing years, the prospects of war appears to have lessened. Parents today do not want to spare their sons for another global war or the so-called Korean police action. They are going to support the man as president most likely to keep us out of war. Most of these parents have become convinced during the past four years that Eisenhower is dedicated to peace.

Those opposed to the present administration can do some big talking and they are going to do their best to make the health of Eisenhower a political issue, but privately they will admit that stopping Eisenhower is a pretty hopeless task, assuming that his health remains normal from now until the election. Because of this, candidates for the lesser offices, including that of congressman, will have a hard time convincing the voters that the paramount issue is not peace or war.

Not to be overlooked also is the fact that as a general thing the greater segment of our population never had it so good. If doubtful just compare the present standard of living with that of even ten years ago. Up to now one of the recent problems is not how to get ahead to buy a car, but where to park it after you do buy it. How many people of your acquaintance, who live over five blocks from work, take the trouble to walk to work? Most will agree that walking would be far healthier, but walking is far too slow and too inconvenient.

However, we would be quick to decide for peace if the prosperity hinges on the coming of another war.

In 50 Years

Men and institutions are ultimately judged by results. That is true of medical research. And the results it has produced in the last half-century or so are superlative by any standard.

The head of a pharmaceutical company tells of some of them in the current issue of The Exchange Magazine. In 1900, life expectancy at birth was about 49 years. Now it is around 71 years, and some experts expect it to reach between 80 and 100 years by the end of this century.

In 1900, the greatest killer was pneumonia. Now it has been all but defeated, with the death rate down from 152 per 100,000 to 12. In 1900, the survivors of pneumonia could count on paying three months' wages for hospital bills. Today the disease is often cured at home with antibiotics, at a comparatively small cost.

Particularly noteworthy progress has been made in saving children. Of every 1,000 babies surviving birth in 1900, 162 died within the first year; today the figure is less than 30. At the beginning of the century, 7,000 children died annually of whooping cough; last year the mortality was 810.

These are but a few of the many facts that could be cited as to what medicine has accomplished on behalf of us all. In the last 50 years more progress has been made in conquering disease and in prolonging life than in the entire previous history of man's existence. It was done by free men working in a free system.

Voices From the Grass Roots

Voices from the grass roots are listened to with respect and interest in Congress.

During the first three months of this year, The American Press reports, editorials and articles from 69 weekly and semi-weekly newspapers were quoted in the Congressional Record. Papers from 28 states were thus represented. The quotations covered a great gamut of topics and problems—racial integration, the future of solar energy, flood control, the farm situation, government spending, foreign policy, and so on.

The men and women of Congress want to know what local people are thinking—and the country paper tells them.

Right or Wrong

Most people believe that international trade would do a good bit toward ironing out national misunderstanding, providing of course trade was given a free hand. One important consideration is that trade to be advantageous to us should be our friends and share in our hopes and purposes and should be on a two-way street basis.

However, we do not always face the ideal situation as Communist Poland demonstrates. This country has long exported pork products to this country, principally ham. Now we are importing more and more of these products. One source says that in the first quarter of this year, imports from Poland totaled 7,729,000 pounds of pork, an increase of over 40 percent of the corresponding period of last year. March in the last of the quarter, the imports jumped to an 86 percent increase.

Can We Tie Our Own Shoelaces?

A child is more self-reliant if he can tie his own shoelaces; the same principle applies in the realm of public affairs.

United States Senator Harry F. Byrd recently said, " . . . we are building up a government of paternalism. There is no state in this Union that can't support its school system . . . There is not a single county in this country that can't do it. Of course, if they think they are getting something for nothing from the Federal government, it may be that they won't try to do it . . ."

A child who never learns to tie his shoelaces faces a dark future. So do people who look to a government of unlimited powers to do for them what they should do for themselves.

 and from that the Boots and Sandals square dance club was organized. All graduating classes since then have gone on into the Boots and Sandals of this club. Howard says that this is a slack time of the year and only three or four nights a week are devoted to square dances. During the winter months, five or six nights are spent at his favorite sport. The Boots and Sandals club is an occasional call to other clubs, but only when it does not interfere with work at his own club.
 A recent invitation to go on tour was turned down, because Howard felt that he could not spare the time from the Boots and Sandals. He and his wife and helper, Maxine, do attend an institute for one or two weeks each year in which they receive special dance training and techniques. This year they will attend an institute at the hotel resort at Lake Quinalt, Washington.

Friendliness
 Howard feels that square dancing is not only a healthy recreation, but he does his best to promote friendliness and feels that if only one couple from each class is helped to a healthier, friendlier life that the class has been a success.

A progressive club, the Boots & Sandals recently became one of the few clubs on the west coast to have its own hall. They acquired a large building on South 10th street and converted it into the Boots and Sandals Barn, with Carl Rich supervising the "western days" theme of remodeling.

Progressive in Unity
 Progressive is in unity with other clubs, Howard has been ac-
