REFLECTIONS

Women Are Strange

I've never seen a woman with a basket of cabbage on her head nor one trudging to market with a goose but I have seen a few drive beautiful new cars to market, to buy what men have raised. When there's a job to be done women take charge and we men make the alibi. If women weren't insatiable "button pushers" rivers wouldn't be harnessed; if they didn't shove few men would reach the peak of financial wealth.

War would be abolished; it would be fought over a Bridge Game on a four doubled bid and if they didn't insist upon ruby lips and peach-blossom cheeks—in jars. Drug Stores would have more room for their lunch counters.

When women learned to use can openers cook-books went into the discard. In olden times women worked too but they didn't know about canners in packages and dried soap in cellophane bags; it's the men who build the fires to heat the cans that women open. Our women are the Queens and we the willing firemen.
