School Resuming, School Bus Stop Law in Effect

A fleet of more than 1,800 school buses is now being readied to transport Oregon school children when classes resume next month.

Number of school buses in service has increased more than 45 percent since 1949, when the state first started inspecting the vehicles.

Safety officials reminded today that the school bus stop law will be back in full effect when the buses take to the road again.

State safety officials reminded today that the school bus stop law will be back in full effect when the buses take to the road again.

Driver adherence to the law is further confused because the big yellow vehicles are sometimes used during the summer to transport farm workers and motorists do not have to stop when buses are not hauling school children. When school resumes, however, drivers must stop. The law requires them to remain stopped whenever children are leaving a school bus or crossing the road. This applies to all areas, rural and urban, with one exception. On a four-lane road, drivers approaching a stopped bus from the opposite direction may proceed "with caution."

Headquarters chairman, George Owens, announced at the committee meeting held at the headquarters Wednesday afternoon of last week that interest in the recall had shown a definite upswing since the recent newspaper statements and circular information had been released.

However, Owens cautioned the committee that there was still a great need to get more information to more people to aid the voters in understanding the issues.

Those wishing to sign petitions or volunteer as circulators are advised to contact the recall headquarters in Eugene, phone DI 5-0732.

Venn Recall Committee Announces Progress

The committee for recall of Eugene C. Venn, district attorney for Lane County, announced last week from its new headquarters at 724 Willamette, Eugene, that an increased effort would be made to reach the voters in outlying areas by increasing volunteer petition circulations.
