REFLECTIONS

That Old Photograph

In one hand I hold a photograph that has the touch of an artist; in my other hand I hold a photograph that is an image and little else. The subject has the tight bodice, high neck and ramrod back of her day; today, even the least expensive cameras would do better but when grandma was a girl daguerreotype photography was an innovation. In spite of its limitations, then, without it I would have no idea of the appearance of this sweet old lady.

The person who conceived this invention gave us illustrations in magazines that are creations of beauty. He gave us a means of keeping fresh the joys of babyhood, the charm of wife, lustre of her smile, the parade of boys going away and returning, the exquisite beauty of a butterfly in flight, rich colors of autumn—this wonderful invention has never stopped evolving since 1839.

Time swallows the old and brings us the new. P.S. We, too, create a picture, with spiritual solace as the theme.
